HAILIE HILLOCK

Business Owner

Hailie Hillock, 28, of Enterprise is a home-town girl, daughter of Jodi Gover-Adams of Enterprise and Steve Feiling, now of Baker. Her mother worked in the business administration department of the Wallowa Mountains Office of the U.S. Forest Service Eagle Cap District Hells Canyon National Recreation Area when it was located in Enterprise. Hailie graduated from Enterprise High School in 2008 and went on to Blue Mountain Community College for a degree in her mother's field, business administration.

The apple didn't fall far from the tree in that regard. Hailie was born for customer service and business. She recalls a favorite playtime activity was "playing office."

She got her start really early, entering wilderness permits into a data base for the USFS when she was 15 and later working the front desk at the Enterprise Forest Service Visitor's Center.

After obtaining her degree, Hailie continued working for the Forest Service until the visitor's center burned in 2010. She then became a recreation tech on the Wallowa Whitman National Forest, cleaning and maintaining trailheads.

She recalls that stint with satisfaction. It was a good job for a strong young woman. She put in 10-hour days and cleaned up a lot of garbage and "had a lot of fun," she said.

She met her husband, Jared Hillock of Enterprise Electric, through mutual friends in 2014 and now enjoys co-parenting his daughter Ella, 8.

Hailie still works for the Forest Service as a seasonal office clerk, but her business interests have definitely expanded. She had been working for Bennett Insurance in Enterprise for four years when Kathleen Bennett decided to retire and offered Hailie and Jared the opportunity to buy the business last May.

As business people, Hailie and Jared are big donors to nearly every fundraising event that comes around. They particularly enjoy working to support the events of the Northeast Oregon Aviation Foundation, helping with the fly-in each year and building backcountry airstrips.

They also enjoyed being part of the building of the Joseph Playground and maintaining the electrical system at Ferguson Ski Ridge. Hailie has always enjoyed Rotary though she is no longer a member.

101 vote close in Wallowa County

Oregon voters approved a slate of health care taxes to help fund Medicaid in a referendum vote Jan 23.

Nearly 62 percent of voters approved keeping certain taxes on health insurance premiums, hospitals and managed care organizations, and about 38 percent voted to overturn them, according to unofficial preliminary results provided by the Oregon Secretary of State.

The result lifts significant financial pressure off state lawmakers as they prepare to enter the short legislative session that begins Feb. 5.

Voters in Wallowa County split nearly evenly with 50.87 percent voting "no" and 49.13 percent voting "yes." Of the county's 5,369 eligible voters, 2,589 voted, a turnout of 48 percent.

The ballot measure was far less popular in Union and Baker counties. Union voters cast 7,144 ballots and defeated the measure 57-43 percent. Turnout was 41 percent.

Baker County voters also voted a resounding "no," 64-36 percent. Turnout was 43 percent.

Measure 101 was most popular in Benton and Hood River counties where roughly 70 percent of voters cast ballots in favor. The measure was least popular in Sherman County, situated to the east of Hood River County. Benton County includes the Albany and Corvallis area of the state.

Rejection of the package would have meant a $210 million to $320 million loss in state revenues, plus additional matching funds from the federal government, that were anticipated to help the state pay for Medicaid.

About 960,000 Oregonians are on Medicaid, which here is called the Oregon Health Plan.

The campaign pitted public unions and health care groups against two Republican lawmakers who led the campaign after petitioning to get certain parts of the 2017 legislation on the ballot this fall.
