Oregon lawmakers expand Farm-to-School Program

By GEORGE PLAVERN
Capital Press

SALEM — Oregon's Farm-to-School and School Garden Network is poised to expand after state lawmakers approved a bill tripling the program's budget. House Bill 2579 passed June 29 as Senate Republicans returned to work from a nine-day walkout in opposition to a controversial carbon pricing scheme known as cap and trade. The senators rushed to vote on numerous bills over two days in order for the Legislature to adjourn by June 30. That included HB 2579, which cleared both the House and Senate unanimously. The Farm-to-School Program awards non-competitive grants to school districts across Oregon, reimbursing them for buying locally grown and processed food. Any district can opt in, and funding is determined based on the number of meals served under the National School Lunch Program — with a minimum award of $500 for smaller districts. Districts can also apply for separate competitive grants to fund school gardens and educational activities, teaching kids about agriculture. Rick Sherman, Farm-to-School and School Garden coordinator for the Oregon Department of Education, said the program started in 2012 with just $200,000. The current budget is $4.5 million, and now HB 2579 will provide an additional $10.35 million from the state general fund through 2021, bringing the total to nearly $15 million.
