Nez Perce elder Allen Pinkham Sr. talks about the importance of Nez Perce stories and place names to understanding landscape at Old Chief Joseph's gravesite near Wallowa Lake on Sunday, May 2, 2021. The group of interviewers (Preston Amerman, Jane Fritz and filmmaker Haley Thompson, far right) are working with the Josephy Center for Arts and Culture to develop a project that will correlate Nez Perce stories with scientific understanding of some Wallowa County and other regional features.

Fonzie, a 5-year-old Bernese mountain dog, takes his owner, Jeanne Hogan of rural Joseph, for a walk at Wallowa Lake State Park on a chilly Sunday, May 2, 2021. "He's a very kind, mellow dog," Hogan said. "But sometimes he's just determined to go the way he wants to."

There's no shortage of homes for wood ducks and bats — just a place to put them — at Marr Pond in Enterprise. Renovations of the storage barn on the east side of the park, which is part of ongoing work to upgrade the facilities at the popular fishing spot, revealed a treasure trove of the wooden boxes that now await new locations and projects.

Nez Perce tribal members Gloria Greene, right, and Liz Atto stop for asparagus at Rob Hollingsworth's Rob's Produce stand in Enterprise. The two women were returning to Lapwai on Thursday, April 29, 2021, after the ceremony that transferred land from the Methodist Church Camp at Wallowa Lake to the Nez Perce Tribe. The produce stand will continue offering asparagus from Milton-Freewater through early June, followed by cherries and then Walla Walla strawberries, Hollingsworth said.
