Fire danger level moves to 'Extreme'

Chieftain staff

Fire danger level in the Wallowa-Whitman National Forest was moved to "Extreme" on July 8.

The move was made as conditions continue to remain hot and dry across much of the west.

Additional fire-prevention measures take place as a result of the move to extreme, or Industrial Fire Precaution Level 4.

According to a press release from the U.S. Forest Service, the IPFL 4 measures add the following restrictions:

- Chain saw and power saw use is not allowed.
- Tractor, skidder, feller-buncher or shovel logging operations are not allowed, nor are mechanized loading operations, hauling of any product or material, cable yarding, or blasting.
- Welding, metal cutting, or any other activities that can produce or emit a spark are not allowed.

Phase B public use restrictions remain in place for now. Rules under Phase B are as follows, according to the USFS:

- Campfires are not allowed outside of the fire pits provided at developed recreation sites, where all flammable material should be cleared 10 feet from the edge of the pit, and the pit should be free of overhanging material.

- Anyone with a campfire must have a tool that can serve as a shovel and at least one gallon of water. Campfires must be attended at all times and completely extinguished prior to leaving.

While campfires are still allowed in Wilderness Areas, year-around restrictions in the Eagle Cap Wilderness prohibit campfires within 100 feet of any lakes or posted wetlands. Campfires are also prohibited within ¼ mile of the lakes listed on the back of Eagle Cap Wilderness permits.

As a reminder, year-around campfire restrictions also apply to the Hells Canyon National Recreation Area within a ¼ mile of the Wild and Scenic portions of the Snake River, from Hells Canyon Dam to the Oregon-Washington border.
