Helping those who need it

ore people across the region and locally are utilizing food banks and that means those facilities need as much help as they can get from area residents.

The average number of people who accessed fresh food services jumped by 28% in April and May and there was a 23% increase in fresh food box demand across Baker, Grant, Union and Wallowa counties.

While statistics tell only part of the story, the tale they do reveal is troubling. The apparent causes of the rise in services are inflation and the sudden evaporation of federal COVID-19 relief funds.

Finding the cause, though, is only the first step. The next move is to discover how to alleviate the need. Regional food banks receive regular shipments from the Oregon Food Bank. The state food bank deliveries are supplemented by fresh produce donations from local stores and farmers.

Citizens and residents who can, though, need to do more to help. That means finding ways to donate more food on a regular basis to area food banks. We've lamented food insecurity on a regular basis on this page and that's because in a nation as rich as ours we believe no one should go hungry. We also believe that local problems are best solved at the local level. We have a great capacity locally to fix even the most complex problems, to overcome even the most difficult problems.

NEW CAPTAIN, ASS IT ON.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Joseph UGB in wrong place

This abridged letter ran in the November 26, 2008 Chieftain edition:

When heading toward Joseph on Ski Run Road just after crossing the bridge over the Wallowa River, the road winds through one of my favorthrough this intact native ecosystem on the edge of town.

A large subdivision is planned for this area, which comprises part of the terminal moraine of Wallowa Lake. This area could soon be converted to houses, roads, buildings and lawns. In the field of ecology this type of land cover conversion from natural environment to suburban is basically irretrievable with habitat values lost. This follows on the heels of a still-proceeding development just around the corner that is filling a much more sensible location — a cleared field, removed from the Wallowa River corridor, and within an existing neighborhood. Boulderfields is different. Can we not better prioritize our development to protect the Wallowa Lake Moraines and their glacial legacy, wildlife corridors, intact plant communities and functioning ecosystems?

If Boulderfields is developed we will be living in a land that is a little less wild, and a little less connected.

David Mildrexler Enterprise same amount of material has been added to the pile. The pile is 10 feet tall and at least a 10th of a mile long. It is not just unsightly but is a fire hazard.

Repeated calls to Rahn's have resulted in no action. Indeed, the company fails to return calls. We are now entering into what may well be another dry and dangerous

Our region is rich in people who care about one another and we should be able to address the rise in the need for food in a proactive way.

That means all of us can do our part. A simple donation, if possible, to a local food bank can make all the difference in the world to a family or individual who is suddenly food insecure.

Volunteering to assist a local food bank or some other charity that is trying to help those who are less fortunate is another good way to help make a difference.

Making a difference is easy if we want.

We can all work together to help our local and regional food banks and to lend a helping hand.

ite areas, Boulderfields.

Here the land is covered with glacial erratics of various shapes and sizes, and complex contours that look like waves riding across the landscape. The grasses and shrubs transition into a beautiful ponderosa pine savanna. Marmots and other wildlife make good use of this unique habitat. The green ribbon of vegetation along the Wallowa River corridor flows

Debris pile at Joseph Transfer station is a hazard

Over the past four years plus, Rahn Sanitary has spent maybe half a day managing the debris pile at the Joseph Transfer station.

Earlier this year they removed around 20% of the pile, and since then at least the summer.

This eyesore and fire hazard should be dealt with. The Joseph City Council has also been contacted and failed to respond. Public pressure should be placed on both Joseph council and Rahn's Sanitary. This mess needs to be dealt with. It is already close to unmanageable. The time to act is now.

Stephen Kliewer Joseph
