Yaw, who has been in 4-H since she was 9 years old, has had a variety of projects during her career. She's raised and entered at the fair with horses, swine, sheep, cows and dogs, as well as cooking.

But seeing her 4-H project animals sold for slaughter doesn't bother Yaw, who has become accustomed to their fate.

"That doesn't bother me," she said. "I'm selling a swine this year. It's part of life. ... If you know you're going to sell that animal, it doesn't bother me."

In fact, it's the cook-husband, Grant, in 1961 and she has lived in Imnaha for 62 years, a place she said she still "dearly loves." Warnock said entering exhibits in the fair was a natural progression from working with her children through 4-H and FFA activities.

She normally enters "some of everything," she said. She has two quilts entered this year, a small one and a large one.

"I make a lot of denim quilts. I like to use old jeans," she said. "It gives me something to do when it's too hot to work outside in summer and (too cold) in the winter."

Warnock also has a big garden.

"It's one of my favorite things, next to my kids and grandkids," she said.

Warnock has won Best of Show awards for some of her pies through the years and last year garnered a Best of Show for the Theme of the Fair.

The awards are not the only motivator for entering things in the fair, she admits.

"I just like to look at everything," she said. "It's fun to come back and see what you got. It's exciting. You get a lot of ideas from other people."

There are several tips Warnock can offer people who are contemplating entering exhibits in the Wallowa County Fair. The first is to start early.

"Start right after (the) fair and start thinking for next year," she said.

Warnock also said everybody has something to offer the fair.

"Everybody is good enough," she said. "We have to help our fair. If not, we're gonna lose it. The young ones have to start doing their part. It's good to support (the fair) and it's fun to do those things. I'd really encourage people to enter things in the fair — if they don't we won't have a fair."
