Boots or Anklets; Take Your Choice

New York, Dec. 3.—Incoming ships are bringing heaps of exciting things to our shores these days, besides royalties and bolsheviks. Not the least of these were worn by two dashing American matrons when they put their best foot foremost down the gangplank the other day. One wore an alluring golden anklet that gleamed seductively through the transparent mesh of her gossamer silk hose and the other swaggered down in a dashing little pair of honest-to-goodness regular Russian bullet boots.

You can take your choice between these two divergent styles according to your temperament and the turn of your ankle. It's always well to remember, however, that where there's a well turned ankle there's many a well turned head. And it does seem such a wicked waste of short skirts, sheer hosiery and slender shanks to go and drag boots on the scene.

Nevertheless there be many who are doing it—some because they follow zealously every vagary of the mode whether it means baring their backs or booting their tootsies, others (and naturally all bootless devotees rest under this suspicion) because their ankle lines, or rather lumps make boots the lesser of two evils.

There are lots of boot styles to choose from when it comes to color schemes and ornateness, though the general cut of all the boots is about the same. All over patent kid ones are smart and those of patent kid lowers with light kid uppers, either grey beige or tan have designs of the black patent kid on their turn over cuffs at their tops.

All grey or light tan boots of suede are softer and more form-fitting, as are, and a few sport tassels, fur trimmings and even go the elaborate frill of a bit of hand tooling here and there like an edition de luxe.

We have been threatened with this boot fad ere this but it didn't stick sufficiently to make a deep boot print on the sands of Fashion, or a deep impression on feminine favor. The very fact that the price of leather is so high now-a-days as to almost make these high boots prohibitive except to the most expensive and exclusive trade may be the stamp of approval on them now that they harked when the hot polka could afford to be booted with the best of them.

The high cost of booting makes rather for the anklet as a more popular foot adornment of the season, however, especially does it go well with the oriental trouser effects so prevalent among our less skirts these days. The skirts puff in around the hem do their worst to simulate haremness effects and there is a return to this fashion of a season ago that bids fair to exceed even the success of its debut. In that wicked Paris more blatantly bifurcated garments have been flaunted in the face of convention and if this sort of thing keeps on and up lovely woman may be able to tuck her trousers in the tops of her boots like a regular wild-western fellow when she goes to cast her vote at the next presidential election, by heck.

The big mill of the Hammond Lumber company at Mill City threatens to close because of a shortage of cars. The company employs between 600 and 700 men.

Introducing Mr. Ernest Hamlin Baker and an unknown young lady model whom we strongly suspect of being Miss Baker.

The artist (the larger figure wearing a smock and necktie) is the designer of the 1919 Red Cross Christmas Seal.

This cheery little sticker which makes its annual appearance just before Christmas is the symbol of the fight against tuberculosis, for it is from the sale of this seal that the National Tuberculosis Association is chiefly financed.

The seal design this year is a particularly happy one, that of genial faced Santa Claus with his pack, clearly outlined against a blue sky.

Mr. Hamlin came down from Poughkeepsie to the Big Town with a his wife, $250 of borrowed money, a college education, two years' experience newspaper cartooning and art knowledge acquired in a $15 correspondence course," to quote his own words.

It was when he got down to his last lonesome nickel that the tide of his fortunes turned. "I tried to sell a group of caricatures of noted Europeans to several magazines, but none of them would have it," he said. "In despair I left it with one of the leading comic weeklies, and retired to the home nest to count that last nickel.

The next morning the telephone rang. The editor desired to see me. As O. Henry says, "in that moment I experienced all the feelings of a multi-millionaire. In fact I no doubt touched heights inaccessible to the ordinary capitalist. That was really the high emotional spot of my New York career."

Mr. Baker's work has been largely along the lines of health, safety-first and educational subjects in general.

The National Tuberculosis Association expects to obtain $5,500,000 from this year's Red Cross Seal sale, in order to carry out its nation-wide program against the White Plague.
