Newness is alright enough in itself. But it is beside itself when it is gained only by the loss of dignity.

In The Capital Journal the people of Salem have an interest. To an appropriate change in form of the paper, certainly no one would make object tion. But of a change which involves the violation of time honored customs, upon which dignity depends, there cannot be approval. The new thing your editor proposes violates those customs Therefore, to a final adoption of the proposal, I am constrained in appreciation of Salem and The to object
