

HOME PRODUCTS WEEK PLANNED TO BEGIN JANUARY 19

Every merchant in Salem will sell Oregon goods, and every citizen of Salem will be urged to purchase Oregon-made products during the week beginning January 19, until the 24th. This was the time selected at the regular weekly luncheon of the Salem Business men at the Commercial club Monday for the Home Products Week. A committee, each member of which represents one kind of business in the city, was named to make all necessary arrangements for the week.

This week, only beginning January 17, is the period during which a national thrift campaign will be staged. Feeling that the greatest thrift a citizen of a community can practice is the advancement of the interests of his own community, which in this case would be the purchase of home-made products, the business men decided to float both campaigns together.

Clark Makes Talk.
Speaking for the home products week, A. G. Clark, manager of the Associated Industries of Oregon, talked to the business men. It was through arrangements perfected by Mr. Clark that the privilege of holding the first home products week in Oregon was granted Salem.

How the mail order houses are spreading throughout the west, undermining local industry and jeopardizing future coast business was told by Mr. Clark. He said that now great plans are being laid by mail order houses to exploit western industry, and that if this is to be halted the "business men of the west must get their belt on a faster pulley and beat the mail order men at their own game."

"The person who patronizes mail order firms," he asserted, "is the man who is purchasing is not one-fifth of the quality the goods made in his own home town are, and who fails to have home-made products in his house, is a knacker and ought to move out."

Salesmen Held Ignorant.
The fact that few Salem residents know little or nothing of the industries in their own city was mentioned by Mr. Clark.

"How many of the people in Salem know that two of the largest distributors and two largest advertisers in the United States are housed in their own city? Perhaps they have never even heard of the Phos company and the Salem King Products company."

"How many of them know that gloves that are being sent and used in all parts of the world are made here in their own glove factory? How many of them even know you have a glove factory?"

"All this will be brought to them," he said, "and they will learn to know that products for which they send to mail order houses for are made right here, and sold even cheaper than they see get them at a mail order house, in a Home Products Week."

The Associated Industries of Oregon stands ready with prizes, Mr. Clark said, for best displays of home products by merchants of the city.

The committee chosen to launch the home products-thrift week in Salem are: Roy Shields, W. M. Walton, Rev. R. N. Aldrich, J. F. Hutchason, William Ochsler, James Elvin and John H. Scott.

Governor Charges Fish And Game Commissioners To Settle Differences

In a communication addressed to the members of the state fish and game commission Governor Olcott Monday put the adjustment of the difficulties which have split the board directly up to the members, as follows:
"I have asked the fisheries and game committees of the two houses of the legislature to meet in joint session here today to discuss openly and fairly developments in affairs relative to state administration over commercial fishing and over the wild game and fish life of the state."

"It is my plan to outline in a general way to you the proposals I intend to make to the special session of the legislature next week. If you deem it wise to do so, after a full and free discussion, I would suggest that your joint committee formulate some plans for proposed legislation which may be introduced early at the special session."

"My sole object in calling you together is that some concrete basis may be reached, if possible, for submission to the special session of a clearly defined plan."

"Because of the interest that all of you have had in fish and game matters you were selected to serve on these various committees. I felt certain you would be pleased to meet here to discuss these problems and to endeavor to arrive at some satisfactory recommendations which might materially save delay and enhance prompt action following convening of the extraordinary session."

"I have also taken the liberty of extending through the press a general invitation to any others conscientiously interested to meet with you and discuss these problems. In order to make the disposition of the time of this meeting entirely under your control the invitation to the public was worded in such a way that it might be understood visitors could impart information and extend their views upon request to the joint committee only. In asking representatives of the various interests to be present I do so in the feeling and hope that an amicable and harmonious adjustment could be reached."

"A certain amount of give and take is essential in arriving at any large conclusion for the good of all. No two minds will think long directly the same track in arriving at a given conclusion. But I feel that we are all interested in the welfare of the state. I feel that we are all willing to sacrifice some of our opinions in an endeavor to arrive at an end which will be for the greater benefit of all. With these important interests at stake I look for some satisfactory solution of the problems developed."

"Calm and dispassionate discussion will bring out the varied ideas and out of such discussion a workable and acceptable program should follow."

"In a general way I have had in mind suggesting to the coming legislature a division of authority over the commercial and sportsmen's interests. I believe by the establishment of a commission of three-members to have control over the commercial interests and a commission of five members to have control over the interests of the anglers and the hunters, much of the past discussion and wrangling may be eliminated. To the one commission complete jurisdiction should be extended over commercial interests and to the other complete jurisdiction over game fish and wild life."

"Legislation probably will have to be worked out as to opening and closing of streams, and kindred matters which may be the basis of possible conflicts. It is quite probable that such difficulties could be overcome by extending to the separate commissions the necessary powers of opening and closing streams relative to their respective interests. In case of conflicts on this or other matters an arbitration board might act. This board could be constituted of the chairman of each commission, with the attorney general acting as a third disinterested party. Or the arbitration board could be constituted in some other manner, such as by the selection of three disinterested citizens, these citizens to be selected immediately after the new laws go into effect."

"These suggestions are tentative in their nature and are offered for your consideration as a possible basis from which to work. Perhaps better plans may be worked out than those which I am offering. I believe, however, that most earnest consideration should be given to the question of segregation. Other plans have brought discussion in the past and some new plan should be worked out. The proposal of segregation may have its impractical features, but by careful thought these may be largely eliminated. If segregation can avoid further discussion and bring about harmony in any material degree, it is well worthy the deepest thought."

gation can avoid further discussion and bring about harmony in any material degree, it is well worthy the deepest thought.

"In conclusion it is my opinion that the governor should be a member of neither commission. It is not proper policy for the governor to be a member of a commission of this nature and whatever legislation is enacted should contain no provision placing the governor on either or both of such commissions."

"I am hopeful that everyone will work toward the end of the greatest good that local, sectional or factional interests may be forgotten in a common effort to arrive at that good."
