CAR ABANDONED HERE AT LAST IDENTIFIED

After being in the possession of the Salem police for about three weeks and held at a Turner garage for four months, the large Hudson Six car abandoned near Turner early in November was identified Thursday thru Sheriff W. I. Needham's office.

The car was originally the property of the Cobly Engineering company of Seattle, but is now owned by the Aetna Insurance company. The identification of the car was brought about through the efforts of Deputy Sheriff Bert Smith. While on business in Turner about two weeks ago, Deputy Smith secured the engine number of the car and later with the assistance of Deputy Oscar Bower searched "stolen-car" notices, finally finding a corresponding number in a bulletin issued by the Pacific Coast Underwriters' conference.

Correspondence from the sheriff's office resulted in the arrival Thursday of Ben Ludlow of the Aetna company and Joe Keller investigator for the underwriter's conference. The car was identified by them, and taken to Portland the same day.

The car was brought to Salem in November by former Chief of Police Percy M. Vanezy, but was later returned to a Turner garage. No clues leading to the identification of the car thieves has been found. A bullet hole in the rear fender of the car indicated that some one had taken a shot at the fleeing car, when it was stolen from Seattle about November 5.

The identification lists by which the car was located are furnished to all sheriff's office and police headquarters throughout the country.
