

LOCAL MAN CREDITED WITH PRODUCTION OF A.E.F. SPORT REVIEW

R. A. Harris, who returned to Salem recently from service with the Y. M. C. A. overseas, has in his possession one of the most unique books ever published, in that it deals with the famous inter-allied games in which 15 nations participated.

The book is a well bound and aptly illustrated volume containing a complete review of the inter-allied games at the Pershing stadium, Paris, June 22 to July 6, 1919.

Army officials, French military and civil authorities and Y. M. C. A. officials have accorded to Mr. Harris congratulations for his achievements in the arrangement and mechanical production of the volume.

During 18 months service in France, the ex-state printer was called upon to work in many important divisions of the tremendous "Y" organization, but he personally regards the production of this book his largest and most important assignment.

The book was produced by the joint efforts of United States Military authorities and the Y. M. C. A., in an effort to perpetuate the tremendous scope and value of A. E. F. athletic activities as symbolized by the erection of the Pershing Stadium and the competition of the allied forces in the 1919 event.

The volume was compiled under the direction of Major George White, Infantry, Capt. Joseph Mills Hanson, Field Artillery, edited the book while Captain Carl V. Burger, Infantry, supervised the art division of the work.

When distribution is completed, there will be five of these volumes in Oregon, the edition being limited. For public reference, volumes will be filed at the State Library and the Portland and Salem Y. M. C. A. offices.

In connection with his work in perfecting publication, Lieut. Louis H. Frohman, General Headquarters, A. E. F., has written the following letter to Mr. Harris:

"Having prepared the original specifications for this book, when in charge of printing and advertising for the Inter-Allied games, and having been associated with the officers who prepared the designs for the book, I wish to congratulate you upon the resourcefulness with which you have carried out the execution of the book after the departure of the Army Staff, during a period of final editing which presented many technical difficulties, which could not have been foreseen. In overcoming these difficulties, you supplied practical solutions which made the finished book a harmonious whole and a tangible tribute to your labors and abilities."

Harris left Salem, June, 1918, for overseas "Y" service, but owing to unforeseen delays did not arrive in France until August of that year. He was immediately given charge of organization of the Civilian Records Bureau. This division was maintained in connection with the employment of French civilians by the Y. M. C. A. This work was made necessary because of the uncertainty of civilian conditions in France during the war. This bureau carefully investigated all help employed in an effort to eliminate undesirable applicants. That the standard of French employees was very high and that efficient and trustworthy help was the rule, is attributed to the accomplishments of this bureau.

Mr. Harris was next assigned to

Thirsty Yankees Find Much Solace Over 'Mex' Line

Nogales, Ariz., Mar. 2.—Bootleggers have little patronage in this border town. They do not satisfy a long felt want. A Nogales resident who develops a thirst, having permission of the federal authorities to cross the border, merely steps across the street enters a swinging door and names his liquor. It is as simple as going down to the corner saloon in the old days.

If he names whiskey, he does not get it. Bartenders in Nogales, Sonora, just across a narrow street from Nogales, Arizona, are not allowed to sell whiskey, for Sonora is partly dry. But he can get beer, wine or tequila and many an American, unable to secure whiskey, is now on terms of intimacy with the fiery liquor of Mexico.

Some of the bars on the Mexican side are elaborately equipped and operate handsome dining rooms in conjunction.

Americans who like beer with their luncheons or wine with their dinners cross the border at meal time.

One may buy liquor as liberally as he pleases in Nogales, Sonora, but he must carry it inside of him when he re-crosses to Arizona side. Federal inspectors scrutinize closely everyone coming through the gate in the high wire fence in the international street.
