

Planing to Divert Yellowstone Into Columbia Basin

Livingston, Mont., March 15.—In order to retain, for purposes of irrigating between 1,999,000 and 2,000,000 acres of land in the southeastern Montana, water from Yellowstone lake which now finds its way eventually to the Atlantic ocean by way of the Mississippi river and the Gulf of Mexico, Montana residents are engaged in an effort to prevent its diversion through the continental divide to the Pacific.

An attempt to divert the waters of Yellowstone lake to the Snake river, taking them through the divide which determines the flow on the great watershed in the Yellowstone national park, was planned by Idaho interests after engineers had conceived a daring project to tunnel the divide and carry the Yellowstone water from its 8,000-foot elevation into Shoshone lake for irrigation purposes, and then permit it to follow the natural course through the Snake river and the Columbia to the Pacific.

Montana residents now are organizing a scientific irrigation project which would place water on millions of acres in the 500-mile valley of the Yellowstone river and control the destructive spring floods of the area as well.

Headquarters for the Montana projects have been established at this city, where the Yellowstone river comes out of the mountains and enters the great plain which would be irrigated by the stored water. Articles of incorporation have been filed and the directors have started a campaign to raise $50,000 for preliminary work required before the construction of a dam at the point where the Yellowstone river leaves the lake can be undertaken.

Besides constructing a dam at an expenditure of about $300,000, to store a million acre feet of flood waters, the corporation plans to apportion the water in the Yellowstone river, organize irrigation districts and construct canals which will irrigate between 1,000,000 and 2,000,000 acres of land in ten Montana counties.

Potato sorting and marketing is in order among farmers here.

The prevailing showers are causing farmers here to wear "the smile that won't come off." Just what is needed to insure plenty of hay, plenty of strawberries and plenty of stored up water for the big potato crop. All agree that Oregon always has something good up her sleeve.

The big meeting under the auspices of the parent-teachers' organization, and the Epworth league, held forth to a crowded house Friday evening. The program contained not a dull number and the ple social end of the entertainment was a success both socially and financially. This all happened at Kaiser school, district 35.

Madge Kennedy in
"Strictly Confidential"

It's a wise man who knows his wife's relations!
And they're more particular about it in England than they are over here. Here you can marry anybody. In England, it isn't done! But it couldn't be helped in "Strictly Confidential."

Imagine twenty-three relatives all in one house, and Madge Kennedy went and married the Owner, after lying about her social connections. Funny? It's no word for it. It's a riot of risibilities!

Fancy pulling the bell rope for Uncle. Or pushing a button twice for Cousin Emily to bring up a laundry and soda (yes, they're still serving them in England). But all this is premature. The play's the thing!

See Madge Kennedy. She's inimitable. And if your wife acts unmy, be charitable. No wife is responsible for her relations. She doesn't want to be—that's why she is living under an assumed name—Yours!
