Portland School Teacher Loses In Suit For Salary

Eugenia H. Taggart of Portland never having "signed a contract" with school district No. 1 of Multnomah county but being dependent upon her appointment to the position by the acting superintendent of schools was not a "regularly appointed teacher" and therefore has no claim against the school district except for the time actually engaged in teaching. This is the opinion of Justice Burnett handed down by the supreme court this morning reversing the degree of Judge Robert Tucker of the Multnomah county circuit court and dismissing the action in mandamus by which Mrs. Taggart sought to compel the Portland school board to restore her to a place on the teaching staff of the Lincoln high school.

"The statutes have prescribed the door by which the teacher may enter upon the path which ultimately leads to the position of permanent employment," the opinion reads.

Calling attention to the fact that Mrs. Taggart had "never signed a contract with the district the opinion declares that "at her peril she depended upon her transaction with the superintendent, who really had no authority and if he had, could not and did not exercise it as the law requires."

Inquest Of Boy's Death On Today

Portland, Or., Apr. 6.—The coroner's inquest over the body of Wayne Cason, 19-year-old boy who was killed in the local police station last Sunday evening during a struggle with policemen, was not completed last night and was to be resumed this evening. Cason, according to the version of the tragedy told by the police, lost his life when a revolver fell from a pocket of a policeman, exploded by the impact, the bullet entering the youth's chest.
