Oregon Observations

Portland—Thomas Young, 29, an ex-convict from California, and Geo. Brown, 25, were arrested here last night by Seattle officers, headed by Sheriff Stringer, on suspicion of having been implicated in the murder in Seattle last Sunday of Robert C. Scott, a deputy sheriff, who was a member of a posse which sought to arrest two highwaymen who had held up and robbed a number of persons under sensational circumstances during the preceding night.

Portland—Stormy weather has stopped wool shearing in the northwest and the buyers are doing nothing this week according to reports received here today. Since the opening purchases in the Yakima section the business has been confined to a few lots bought by local speculators and the taking of a few engagements. It is reported that coarse wool can be bought there from 27 cents up while fine wools are worth up to 33 cents.

Astoria—By far the highest price in the history of the industry on the Columbia river will be paid for chinook salmon during the season which opens at noon on May 1, if the demands of the fishermen presented prevail. The Columbia River Fishermen's Protective Union has set the price at fourteen cents a pound for small, or canny fish, those weighing less than 23 pounds each, and sixteen cents a pound for large or old storage fish, those weighing 23 pounds each or over. This is an advance of 2 3/4 cents a pound for small fish and 4 3/4 cents for large fish over the figures which prevailed last year. The packers have not yet announced their decision as to granting the demands.

Portland—Instructions to open an extensive recruiting campaign to obtain men for the merchant marine were received here Wednesday by Lieutenant Harold C. Jones, manager of the local office of the federal service bureau. No limit is set on the number of men that may be accepted for training, according to Lieutenant Jones.

Portland—Frank A. Vanderlip, financier and publisher, arrived here Wednesday from the east and was guest of honor last night at a banquet. He was joined here by Mrs. Vanderlip and their daughter, and today they intend to leave for Seattle, returning here later en route to San Francisco, whence Mr. Vanderlip will sail for the Orient.

Portland—The estate of the late Phil S. Meahan, former state treasurer of Oregon, valued at approximately $300,000, is left to his children, according to his will filed Wednesday for probate. The widow is provided with an annuity, each of the nine children, to receive $5000, besides equal shares of the stock of the Imperial hotel company, when that is divided.

Portland—Attorneys for the 25 alleged I. W. W. charged with violation of the state syndicalism act are ready to go to trial by April 20 of the state will petition the court for appointment of an attorney to represent them, District Attorney Evans announced.

Portland—Oregon's representatives in congress and the heads of the war department will be shown during the next few days with telegrams from commercial organizations and businessmen of Oregon urging that the original plans of Colonel H. H. Arnold, commander of the air service for the army on the Pacific coast, for an air patrol service to protect the forests of the Pacific coast against fire be carried out. The latest announcement from Washington is that only one squadron of airplanes will be assigned to forest fire patrol duty on the Pacific coast.

Manchester, England, has more than 4000 workers whose ages range from 7 to 14 years.

LOWDEN OF ILLINOIS

Governor Lowden of Illinois, who has maintained an organization in Oregon since the first of the year, is looked upon by many business men as the logical candidate for the republican nomination, though comparatively little is known concerning him in the far west, except that he is son-in-law of the Pullman millions and able to finance his own campaign.

Mr. Lowden has made a good governor, bringing about the adoption of the "civil administrative code" which abolished more than 125 boards, commissions and independent offices, and vested their functions in nine new departments, each under control of one man, thereby reducing by one-third the property tax levied for state purposes, as well as increasing efficiency.

On the other hand, it is claimed that through the state tax commission, wealthy private corporations have had their taxes materially reduced, and through the public utilities commission, millions of dollars in the form of excess carfares have been taken from the people.

Mr. Lowden is a farmer as well as a business administrator. He owns two large cotton plantations in Arkansas, a big cattle ranch in Texas and operates one of the largest farms in Illinois. He is a type of the big business man in politics. His viewpoint is that of the capitalist rather than that of the man in the street, and on that account stands little chance of nomination regardless of merits. No millionaire has ever been elected president and none of the petted darlings of inherited wealth are likely to be.

A GOOD SUGGESTION

Commenting upon the fact that the Marion County Taxpayers League went on record as opposing the millage bill giving relief to the schools of Oregon, the Pendleton East Oregonian remarks:

Instead of starving our schools to death, let us abolish the state fair and sell the fair grounds. If Oregon, in the Salem view, is not financially able to maintain its schools it is manifestly poor business to keep up an expensive fair at Salem. It is no less than criminal folly, it would seem, to have a large tract of land at Salem lying idle 11 months out of the year. The plan is to repeal the appropriation for the fair and sell the fair grounds to parties who will use the land for more useful purposes.

The suggestion is a good one. Not only the fair grounds, but other state property and some state institutions could be sacrificed better than the public school system.

Taxpayers who have no better perspective than to save a few dollars in taxes at the expense of the education of children are not the class of citizens Marion or any other county can be proud of.

If we cannot support our schools, let us stop the expenditure of millions in highways. Good roads are needed, but not in comparison with schools. If we must pinch to help our tightwads save tax money, let it be at the expense of luxuries instead of necessities.

Rippling Rhymes

THE YOUNG ONES.

The children of these wasteful times have no respect for modest dimes. It's not their fault; they see their dads like drunkards blow the scads; they're taught by every spendthrift dub that money grows on tree and shrub. They hear no parent wise uplift his voice to preach the creed of thrift. And when they've grown to man's estate, and find it their's to pay the freight, the habits they have learned today will make them prematurely gray. Ere long these booming times must pass, and men must scratch to gain the brass; and youths who've learned to blow it in, but not to store it in a bin, will have a handicap so tall that it will force them to the wall. Do parents ever pause and think, as they blow in the shining chink, for furbelows and costly fids, how they are bringing up the kids? Or don't they care a holy whoop if kids of theirs should reach the soup? Oh, let's get back to frugal ways, and save against the rainy days.

LOVE and MARRIED LIFE

By the Noted Author IDAH McGLONE GIBSON

John misunderstands
I looked at John's face; it was like a piece of parchment from out of which his eyes blazed. I began to talk faster and faster for I had only one idea and that was to finish the explanation. It seemed to me that when I had told him all that he could not be angry any more, for certainly, if John loved me, Karl Shepard had done him a great service in saving my life. However, the more I talked, the more enraged he became. I grew afraid; the words would not come; I stood and looked at him dumbly. He came over to me and placed his hands on my shoulders with a grasp so strong that I winced with pain as he pulled me from the chair and I stood face to face with him. "Tell me, tell me," he said thickly, "what is there between you and Karl Shepard?"

Could Not Answer
I could not have answered if it had cost me my life. The very manner in which he asked that awful question made it impossible for me to answer. My heart stopped beating and I felt my breath grow cold as it passed my trembling lips. I closed my eyes to shut out the horror of the accusation. "Why don't you answer?" and the grip of his hand on my shoulder grew unbearable. In silence I wringed beneath it. "Answer me, answer me. Is Karl Shepard your lover?" "Stop, stop, John, you are hurting me." He looked at me in surprise, for he did not realize that he was hurting me physically. He seemed to think it was his question that had bruised my heart. "Don't try any of those tricks on me," said John roughly. "There is only one thing I want, one thing I must have, and that is an answer to my question."

SLEEPY-TIME TALES
THE TALE OF MAJOR MONKEY
BY ARTHUR SCOTT BAILEY

Major Monkey quite enjoyed the amusement of the picnic. And he did two very odd things, for the commander of an army first he took off his red cap and made a low bow to "Hi, Bill! It's a monkey!" Johnnie bellowed. Bill came running back at top speed. "We're going to catch him," said Johnnie Green. "How're you going to do that?" asked the boy who had been frightened and run away and come back. Nobody answered him, for at that moment one of the youngsters flung a buttered nut at the Major, who caught the missile deftly and shot it back below greeted the Major's ears. A howl of delight from the ground again. "Let's stone him!" somebody cried. But Johnnie Green said, "No! We don't want to hurt him. We'll climb the tree and get him."

Johnnie Green and his mates; and next he swung off the limb of the tree and hung by his tail and one hand. The boys whooped with delight. "Let's catch him!" Johnnie Green cried. And then he shouted to the boy who ran away, and who stood a good safe distance off, looking back and wondering what was going on. The British Columbia minimum wage board recently issued five additional orders fixing minimum wages for females employed as teacher in the manufacturing industry, in personal service occupations and as telephone and telegraph operators.

He plunged, sprawling, through the leafy boughs until he managed to seize a branch and steady himself. Then he was off like a squirrel. And long before the boys had reached the ground again Major Monkey was far away in the woods. Mr. Crow took good care not to lose sight of Major Monkey. And when the Major at last stopped, panting, and slipped down to the ground to have a drink out of the brook, old Mr. Crow promptly joined him. "Aha!" said Mr. Crow. "You were scared. You ran away!" The Major wiped his mouth on the back of his hand and looked at Mr. Crow unseeingly. "I came away—yes!" he said. Mr. Crow snorted. "A fine soldier you are!" he cried scornfully. "You aren't brave enough to lead an army. I should think you'd be ashamed."

Major Monkey seemed pained. He said it hurt him to have Mr. Crow say such cruel things. "It's plain," said he, "that you don't know much about an army. In spite of all I've tried to teach you. Of course I had to leave. I'm the leader of the army; and I must keep out of danger. So when the generals failed to come to my rescue when I whistled for help there was nothing I could do except retreat." For a long time Mr. Crow was silent. "You were scared, anyway," he remarked at last. "I wasn't!" the Major protested. "You were!" said Mr. Crow. "You were! You were! You were!"

The Cold That Hangs On
This is No. 5 of a series of advertisements, prepared by a competent physician, explaining how certain diseases which attack the air passages—such as Pneumonia, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Measles or even a long continued Cold—often leave these organs in an inflamed, congested state, thus affording a favorable foothold for invading germs. Are Your Teeth Bothering You?
When your teeth are bothering you, the first step is to find out what the trouble is. You must go to a dentist, get him to examine your mouth and give you advice. A mistake in advice leads to all sorts of trouble, so it is highly important to get good advice in the beginning. Registered Dentists using the E. R. Parker System examine and treat so many patients that the advice they give is founded upon much experience. The man who does things over and over many times becomes very skillful, and you can depend upon what he says and does. If your teeth are bothering you, go to any E. R. Parker System office and have them examined without charge. You will find prices moderate for any work you need. Good advice, if followed, always leads to good results.
