

Good Fellowship and Elk Creed Go Hand In Hand; Big Brothers Carry Relief and Joy to Hearts of Needy

By Gertrude Robison Ross.

The person who wrote the poem about the house by the side of the road must have been an Elk. If not through actual membership...

No one could wish as devoutly as that poet did, to be a friend to man, without being imbued with every fundamental principle of good fellowship.

For instance, there is the big brotherhood. Without an exception, a big brotherhood is the most wonderful thing in the world.

The big brotherhood of the Elks is just such an influence. It is the messenger that brings the light from the mountain top down into the valleys.

The purple and white have come to stand for the championship of the lowly, than which no nobler championship can be found.

The brotherhood, of course, is national, but here, in Salem, where fate and a group of lawmakers have placed the state institutions.

The great chance of proving that there is much more in a name than the great dramatist would have us believe.

A rose might smell as sweet if it were called a dandelion, but charity would smother too much of charity if it were called by anything but brotherliness.

When a man who has made such a success of his life that he held up to little children as an example of manliness, goes out to a state reformatory, and mingles with a crowd of wayward boys.

This is the secret of their great success. Because this purple and white have come to stand for the open Bible and the draped flag are not merely empty symbols of a hollow piety.

Figures Show Fighters To Be Well Matched

The names McCarty, Baird, Shannon, Trabitis and Morton are new to Salem hotel blotters but to sport followers of the Pacific northwest...

Nothing was too good for Salem during the present Elks' convention and the result is that the bouts at the fairgrounds arena, Friday night are acknowledged to be of the season's premier class.

Here is the dope on the six lads who lead in the main bouts: For the featherweight championship of the Pacific coast.

Earl Baird is 5 years of age, weighs 135 pounds, is 5 foot 5 on the wall and has a 64-inch reach. He has had about five years' experience in the boxing game.

Joe Gorman, another favorite with fight fans, hails from Portland. He is 21 years of age, weighs 127, is 5 1/2 in height and has a reach of 65 3/4 inches.

Over fourteen years experience as a scrapper has made Johnny McCarty's name familiar to fans throughout the county.

Alex Trabitis calls Portland his home city. His measurement card is: Height, 5-5; weight, 142; age, 19; reach, 70 inches.

The third bout, exclusive of two good preliminaries is the encounter between Eddie Shannon and Puggy Morton.

Morton hails from Chicago. Height 5 foot 8 1/2 inches; weight, 135; age, 24; reach, 71 inches.

Shannon has journeyed in Portland and has followed the little play for six years.

3 Men Raise Goblet Too High; One Forfeits Bond

Answering a call from the White-house restaurant at 1:30 a. m. Thursday, officers found two men who had obviously tipped the rosy goblet too high.

Asked to quiet down, the men became affectionate. It was finally necessary to take them to the draperies of their respective couches.

Railroad Will Make Decision Known Tonight

Chicago, July 22.—A decision tonight on whether the eighteen railroad unions will accept the $600,000,000 award was promised today by T. E. Shepherd when the brotherhood chiefs resumed their conference.

If a vote by all union members is ordered the award will be tentatively accepted so that the men will get the increased pay for this month and the back pay from May 1, as provided by the retroactive feature of the railway labor board's decision.

The big brotherhood of the Elks is just such an influence. It is the messenger that brings the light from the mountain top down into the valleys.

Democratic Convention Snap-Shots

The Story of Nominations By A. H. VANDENBERG

The Convention of 1896. The 1896 Democratic National Convention, which gathered in Chicago on July 7, was destined to split the Party quite as the later 1912 Convention split Republicanism.

From the moment the gavel fell, the Convention fight raged around "free silver," and from first to last "free silver" won. The National Committee had proposed Senator David B. Hill of New York for temporary chairman.

The resolutions committee then reported a straight-away "free silver" plank which, after terrific debate, was sustained by a vote of 626 to 303. It was in this debate that Bryan—who got into the Convention only when the credentials committee unseated the "gold delegation" from Nebraska—sprang into white-hot popularity and dominion with that famous speech which concluded in these burning words—"We shall answer their demand for the gold standard by saying to them: you shall not press down upon the brow of labor this crown of thorns; you shall not crucify mankind upon a cross of gold!"

The "silverites" were now so completely in the saddle that the "gold standard" delegates realized they were helpless to prevent a "free silver" nomination, even under the two-thirds rule. They did not withdraw from the Convention at the time, but 478 delegates refused to vote on the Presidential roll-calls.

Richard B. Bland of Missouri led the first ballot, with 235 to Bryan's 119 votes in a total field of 14 candidates. Robert E. Pattison of Pennsylvania, 95, Horace Boies of Iowa, 85, and Joseph S. C. Blackburn of Kentucky 83, were the other principal contenders.

Two weeks later, the Populists also nominated Bryan, but linked Thomas E. Watson of Georgia with him for second place. The National Silver Party, however, adopted both Bryan and Sewall. Then, on September 2, the revolting "gold Democrats" gathered in Indianapolis—with 41 states and three territories represented—and nominated John M. Palmer of Illinois for President, on a single ballot, and General Simon B. Buckner of Kentucky for Vice-President by acclamation.

The result of this campaign was the first election of President McKinley.

The 1900 national democratic convention met in Kansas City, on July 4, in a great auditorium which three months before was destroyed by fire, but which was rebuilt in time for Bryan's nomination for president. The great question of "free silver" which had split the party four years before, was still paramount.

A big wing of the convention wanted to sidetrack this treacherous money question (upon which the country had already returned on verdict) and urged "anti-imperialism" as the issue to be magnified into paramount concern.

The "silver" plank went through the resolutions committee by a narrow margin of two votes. New York's big delegation—under the "silver" control of Richard Croker of Tammany Hall, instead of the "gold" control of ex-Senator David B. Hill—was credited with the deciding influence.

Mr. Bryan was re-nominated on a single roll-call by the unanimous vote of all states and territories. Bryan wanted Charles A. Towne of Minnesota (his running mate on the Populist ticket) nominated with him for vice-president; but the convention had made its last concession to its great leader. Although Bryan was waiting with a special train at Lincoln for an expected invitation to address the convention personally, the invitation never came; and the moving reason was a fear that his presence would result in Towne's selection.

Instead, the convention nominated Adlai Stevenson of Illinois, who had been vice-president with Cleveland in his second term. This action did not come, however, until tremendous pressure had been put upon David B. Hill of New York to accept second place. Hill's name was presented to the convention by Senator Grady of New York, who was immediately followed to the platform by Hill himself with a positive declination.

One roll-call gave Stevenson 59 1/2 votes, Hill 200 and Towne 89 1/2; but before the announcement of the totals, Tennessee changed to Stevenson, and was quickly followed by enough others to make the Stevenson nomination complete.

Governor C. S. Thomas of Colorado was temporary chairman of the convention and J. D. Richardson of Tennessee was permanent chairman. This session resulted in the election of McKinley and Roosevelt. (To Be Continued Tomorrow With The Story of the Convention of 1904.)

After hearing evidence in the case of Rosa Howard against Amos H. Howard, Judge Bingham, sitting in department No. 2 of circuit court decided that a divorce decree was not warranted and dismissed the case. The couple were married January 2, 1927, and have four children. Testimony indicated that Mrs. Howard had continued to live in the same house with her husband, although she asserts that other than the duties of housekeeper in the care of the children, no marital relationship has existed since domestic troubles started the recent legal action. An answer filed Wednesday in the divorce proceedings of Steve Mikulich against Julia Mikulich, Mrs. Mikulich refutes her husband's charges that she had deserted him May 24, 1919. She alleges that her husband deserted her while she was very ill in an Alameda, California, hospital and that he left her without funds, also neglecting to pay her hospital and other expenses due to the burial of their still-born baby. Mrs. Mikulich states that she is willing to come to Oregon and defend the case, but that she is without funds. She asks the court for an order compelling her husband to provide transportation to this state. The couple were married at Oakland, California, September 7, 1918.

Upon evidence that John Bass had lived for only one day with his wife after their marriage about one year ago, Judge George G. Bingham granted a decree dissolving the Bass matrimonial bonds. The action was instituted by Mrs. Bass, who claimed that her husband had concealed his true physical condition from her until after their marriage at Vancouver, Wash., when she discovered that he was under medical treatment.
