Another Triumph for the Liberty Motor
ARMY PLAINS WHIZ OVER GLACIERS AND WOODED WILDERNESSES

Ford built Liberty motors carried the four army airplanes which on October 29 completed the 3000 mile journey from Mitchell Field, Long Island, to Nome, Alaska, and return. The fleet was greeted over New York city by a flotilla of forty army planes which escorted it to Mineola. The returning planes touched their wheels to earth at 3:15 in the afternoon.

The Alaskan flying expedition, commanded by Captain St. Clair Street, undertook the journey to demonstrate the durability of modern airplanes and motors, and to effect the establishment of an aerial route to the northwest corner of the American continent and Asia. Such a route would bring mail from Alaska to the states in two or three days, where as the present method of transmission requires thirty days.

"Talk about service," said Captain Street. "Those planes and motors sure stood up. Why, the only trouble we had on the entire trip was caused by the worst bit of weather I've ever flown thru or want to fly through. We had everything—rain, snow, hail and sleet, clouds, fog and mist. But we kept right on flying."

"The 230 miles of glaciers we traversed was a wonderful sight, but there would have been little hope for rescue had we cracked up in that wilderness. Altogether, it was a rough trip. I never want to fly through such weather again, but the planes stood it magnificently. Instead of battered hulks flopping to earth after winded flight, they looked brand new. Even the turnbuckles were polished and the motors looked as if they had just come off the testing block."

"We never changed a spark plug. Never a cylinder missed on the entire trip. The motors are in as good condition today as when we set out."

Before the flight, all the pilots asked for ships equipped with Ford made Liberty motors.

Due to the nature of the work which engaged the expedition, the fleet required a period of three months to complete the trip. Since all of the original motors completed the journey without repairs or replacements, this is believed to be a record for aerial navigation. It will be recalled that during the war, it was generally the practice to overhaul the airplane motors after approximately each twenty hours of flight.

This is the second notable event in which Ford Liberty motors have figured prominently, the first being the trans-Atlantic jump of a Ford Liberty equipped NC-4, a
