McCroskey Shot at by Would-Be Thief

V. Lyle McCroskey, a student at the University of Oregon and a son of Mr. and Mrs. T. E. McCroskey of this city, refused to be held up by a would-be robber who attempted to ply his art in Eugene last week-end, it was learned here today.
 McCroskey, it seems, was making his way home from the university library when a man commanded him to halt. Believing, or hoping, that the order was for somebody other than himself, McCroskey proceeded on his way until the robber flourished a revolver.
 Overcome by a sudden dislike for the hip-pocket Big Bertha, McCroskey ran. Two shots followed him, but failed to overtake him. The would-be thief escaped.
