

Bernhardt Is Back on Stage In Big Success

Paris, Dec. 29.—Though but a few weeks ago she was lying seriously ill in bed and her illness was causing the greatest anxiety to her many friends and relatives, Sarah Bernhardt, sufficiently recovered, has again faced the footlights and scored one of her biggest successes when playing the part of Daniel in the four-act drama of that name staged at her theater.

While she only appeared in the second and fourth acts, her very presence on the stage was enough to cause the performance to be interrupted for several minutes at a time. Hands and throats were sore after each performance with applauding the great tragedienne.

At the fall of the curtain on the fourth act the stage was completely covered with flowers, and the crowds waited outside to see the "divine Sarah" leave the theater, when she was again loudly acclaimed.

Her acting remains as it always was. In Daniel she had no walking to do, for the second act shows her seated in a big armchair and in the fourth she was lying in bed. Nevertheless, in view of the continual applause she unhesitatingly walked forward to acknowledge the cheers of her admirers. She did not seem to suffer any inconvenience with her artificial leg.

Her voice has not changed or weakened. She still retains that wonderfully emotional character, and many were the spectators who after listening to this great French woman for forty minutes had tears in their eyes.

The plot shows two brothers, one of them, Daniel, in love with the same girl. Daniel, though much depressed, ceases courting the girl in favor of his brother, who ultimately marries the girl. Daniel, meanwhile in an attempt to forget makes to drugs and drinking. After but a few months of married life the young woman finds she has lost her affection for her husband and falls in love with a stranger.

Correspondence is exchanged, and letters fall into the hands of Daniel's brother, who frankly threatens the life of his then unknown adversary. Daniel hears of the matter and to shield the woman he loves and to guarantee her happiness in the future, calls in his brother and tells him that he is his wife's lover. The brother then leaves and refuses to ever see his brother again or hear of him.

In the final act Daniel is shown in bed. The drugs and drinks have had their evil effect and he is dying. In a long lament he calls for his brother, and as the latter clasps his back dead.

Sarah Bernhardt intends to return to the States next year to give a series of performances, visiting the British Isles on her way to fulfill her recently cancelled contracts.

Oregon Editors Meet In Eugene January 14-15

University of Oregon, Eugene, Dec. 30.—The annual professional conference of Oregon newspaper editors, publishers and writers, which is held in the winter months each year at the university school of journalism, has been set for Friday and Saturday, January 14 and 15, according to Eric W. Allen, dean of the school, who is chairman of the committee on arrangements and program.

The proceedings will include three sessions on business problems which will take the form of "short courses" of the post-graduate order, two banquets at which questions of professional standards and practices will be presented, an election of officers, an automobile excursion, the presentation of a feature by students of the school of journalism, an inspection of the school and of new buildings for the university made possible by the passage of the millage bill, and several entertainment features.

The business sessions, which are declared to be of unusual practical importance, are headed "A Short Course in Newspaper Law," "A Short Course in Foreign Advertising," and "A Short Course in Newspaper Management," each to be followed by general discussion.

Dean W. G. Hale, of the university law school, has made a special study of the laws of Oregon relating to newspapers. It turns out that there has been an unusually small amount of newspaper litigation in Oregon, with the result that few of these laws have ever been tested or interpreted on important points. The rights of reporters, editors, and publishers are therefore left vague on many important matters, and a committee was appointed by the State Editorial association at Astoria last summer to report at this conference as to means of making the law more definite and certain. The report of this committee will be presented and a proposal discussed of formulating a newspaper code embodying the best practice of all states to be presented to the legislature.

In the course in newspaper management, F. W. Smith, cost and price expert of the Porte Publishing company at Salt Lake, will act as one of the instructors, coming especially to Eugene for the purpose. An elaborate analysis of the newspaper situation in Oregon is at present being prepared under the supervision of Elbert Bede, editor of the Cottage Grove Sentinel, who is asking every newspaper in the state for an analysis of its overhead expenses as well as for answers to several interesting points of editorial and professional practice.

The foreign advertising course will be initiated by several speakers, among them Charles W. English, manager of the Better Business bureau of the Portland Ad club, and John T. Beamish, who recently took a trip through the east for the express purpose of studying foreign advertising at the source. He visited the advertiser himself and virtually all the agencies. A proposal for joint action by Oregon papers will be advanced.

A discussion is also scheduled of the legal rate bill passed a year ago.

A professional discussion of considerable interest will be an analysis of newspaper progress in an Oregon city by the editors of the two rival papers. Ralph R. Cronise of the Albany Democrat and E. M. Reagan, of the Albany Herald, have been speeding up the newspaper world of Linn county and are going to tell whether their efforts have been appreciated and in how practical a way by the people of community and how successful their efforts have been.

Don Sterling, managing editor of the Oregon Journal, who has never before spoken at a state meeting, will attempt an analysis of the newspaper situation and future for professional journalism as it appears to him after an extensive tour of the United States. On this trip he was accompanied by the associate publisher of the Journal, Captain Philip Jackson, who will also be present at the conference. Professional subjects will also be treated by Dean Allen, Col. Carl Abrams, of the Salem Statesman, chairman of the conference, and others whose subjects have not yet been announced.

Hunter Hurt in Fight With Moose

Bangor, Me., Dec. 30.—George Hinton, of Doaktown, one of the best known hunters and guides of the Miramichi river country, is suffering from two broken ribs and a desperate battle with a wounded bull moose in the woods near New Brunswick. He arrived here for treatment.

Hinton shot and, as he believed, killed one of the largest bulls he had ever seen. Turning to observe another moose, the hunter left the wounded animal for a moment. As he did so, the bull scrambled to its feet and charged.

Realizing his danger, Hinton flung himself upon the moose's horns and clung there until the wearied animal shook him loose and fled into the woods.
