

New Highway Course Across Cascades, Plan.

Albany, Or., Feb. 28. — A new route east from Foster across the Cascade mountains that may be chosen for the state highway between Albany and eastern Oregon in place of the well known Cascade road has been brought to the attention of the county court. It is said of the proposed new route that it will provide easy grades across the mountains, removing such engineering bigobars as Shays' Hill and Seven Mile Hill; and will also do away with the obstacle presented by the Willamette Valley & Cascadia Mountain Road company's claim upon the Cascade road.

The new route follows the Middle Santiam river northeast from Foster by way of Wilcomb's and Brady's to the fork crossed by Pyramid and Lake Fork, thence easterly to Hogg's pass, the lowest pass in the Cascade range between the Columbia River and the Oregon-California line. From the fork of Pyramid and Lake creeks two routes are possible as far as Lava Lake, one directly up Lake creek and over the divide and the other up Pyramid creek around the north end of the divide, thence easterly to Lava Lake. From Lava Lake the route will run just a little south of east to Hogg's pass, by way of Lost Lake.

Men who have been interested in this route for some time. C. C. Hall, forester, also has been over it; and John Penland, now county roadmaster, has traveled it from Foster almost to the Pyramid and a part of the way between Lava Lake and Hogg's pass. Mr. Penland pronounces the project a much more feasible route.

For instance he says that the amount of money required to put Shays' hill in proper condition for a first class road is as high as $100,000. The portion of the road from Foster to Wilcomb's has already been put in fair condition. From Brady to the Pyramids, he says, the grades are easy and from Lava Lake to Hogg's pass the country is level.

The new route will meet the old Cascade road a short distance east of the Jefferson county line. It is pointed out that the adoption of the new route will not interfere with the popularity of the Cascade summer resort, as the road now in use can be maintained for those who may desire to go there.

Doubtless the attention of the state and government officials will be brought to the new route, in view of the fact that a state highway is soon to be built across the Cascade Mountains east of Albany.

Silverton Has 8 O. A. C. Students

Silverton, Feb. 28.—Silverton has 8 of the 45 Marion county agricultural students enrolled for agricultural courses of study at the college. Ten Marion county towns are represented in the school of agriculture and the students rank from the vocational class to the graduate class. Federal and state industrial rehabilitation men are also included in Marion county's agricultural list. About 80 percent of the rehabilitation men are enrolled in the vocational class.

The agricultural school of the college is the only agricultural school of the large colleges or universities of the country that has made a constant gain during the last five years in its agricultural enrollment. The agricultural enrollment for this school year shows Illinois with 1,173, Cornell 1,102, Oregon Agricultural college with 853, Wisconsin 840, and Minnesota 648. The agricultural enrollment of nine of the eleven large institutions show that the enrollment is less than in 1919. The agricultural enrollment of the college increased $1 during the second term over that of the first.

Silverton's agricultural students are Alvin D. Hobart, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Hobart, of route number 1; and Alvin H. Madsen, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Madsen, are seniors. Edward A.
