Loganberry Laughs

The road to success is lined with bill-boards advertising sanitariums.
The blue bird brings happiness, but the stork brings a $200 tax exemption.
Germany appears to have thought of everything except a plea of general insanity.
It appears that increased rates do not make the hauling of empty coaches profitable.

Well, at any rate the meaning of the expression, "leading minds," is no longer obscure.
Some of the enforcement agents have developed sufficient will power to seize it or let it alone.

The coffin manufacturers probably won't reduce prices so long as the hold-up men and bootleggers keep up the demand.

Plebs: a district to be awarded to the country that is able to send in the most soldiers.
Hantzu once offered to pay four billion marks annually. Why do they now rant so about paying less?

The new models have every modern improvement except an attachment on the exhaust pipe to play jazz.
The weak point in that "gentlemen's agreement" with Japan is the fact that picture brides are not gentlemen.

The turks will never be satisfied with that treaty unless it can be amended to give them one more crack at Armenia.
"How to make money out of chickens" is the title of a magazine article. Probably a discussion of a musical comedy.

The more one reflects on the matter the stronger his conviction that Heaton is a place where everybody minds his own business.
There is something fundamentally wrong about an "ism" that makes converts by killing people who don't believe.

Some spell it mandatory and some spell it mandatory and some are content with the old-fashioned spelling c-o-l-l-e-g-y.

Just Folks

Opportunity.
The other day says he to me: "This fellow Opportunity is one that mortals never see.
Yet talk about a lot. There's some who think that he is glum, some think he travels with a drum an' some before he'll ever come they'll die as like as a not."

"Well, what think you?" to him says I, "on him I've never put an eye, he's one I don't expect to spy.
Though much I wish I might." He grinned a curious sort o' grin, looked solemn like an' stroked his chin, an' then said he "I'll start right in to talk to Billy White."

"He surely struck it rich," says I. He looked me squarely in the eye an' says "he did, but how an' why.
Come he to gather pelf? There was no stranger fair to see, a boostin' him. It seems to me, this fellow Opportunity was really Bill himself."

"There was no special luck to it, he got a job an' stuck to it an' brought a world o' pluck to it.
He simply wouldn't quit. "This job ain't much," says he, "I know it doesn't pay a lot of dough, but it's a chance for me to show what I can do with it."

And then an' there he waded in, an' ned that someday he'd win; when things went wrong he whined an' didn't whine or sob, He worked his way to wealth an' fame. His opportunity I claim was but a high-toned fancy name.
For what was just a job.

High School Hazing

The high school student body set an example that the school board and school authorities might well follow by making an investigation of the hazing of sophomores doused under the shower baths and forbidding further hazing. No penalties however were enforced against the hazers.
This again raises the issue, why does the school board and the school authorities tolerate hazing? Is there no discipline in the high school save that which students themselves voluntarily provide? Are there no rules governing the conduct of students and no penalties provided for infringement? Apparently the conduct of the schools is turned over to the student soviet, and the school authorities have abdicated in its favor.

This calls attention to the fact that although students were injured in hazing by high school secret societies two weeks ago, no action has been taken by the school board or school authorities to discipline the hazers or bar the secret societies from the schools, nor has such hazing been forbidden in the future.

As a matter of fact, the school board ordered an investigation, then called it off, then left it to the superintendent to investigate and now have taken it out of his hands and left it to their attorney to investigate.

What is there to investigate? The hazing occurred, the secret societies exist, and the law reads as follows:

5075. Secret Societies Prohibited in Public Schools.—Secret societies of every kind and character, including fraternities and sororities, so called, which may now or hereafter exist among the pupils of any of the public schools of this state, including high schools, either local or county, are hereby declared unlawful.

5076. Boards to Suppress Same.—It is hereby made the duty of each school board within the state, to examine, from time to time, into the condition of all schools under its charge and to suppress all secret societies therein, and for this purpose such boards are hereby authorized to suspend or expel from school, in their discretion, all pupils who engage in the organization or maintenance of such societies.

5077. Act Not to Apply to Colleges.—This act shall not apply to either the state agriculture college or the state university.

By failure to enforce the law and by protecting hazers and illegal societies, the school board is only creating a contempt for the law among the students and public generally.

Freeing the Profiteers

The recent decision by the federal supreme court declaring invalid the "profiteering" and "hoarding" sections of the Lever Food control act was one of the most unfortunate decisions ever rendered by the tribunal as it nullified at one stroke every effort of the nation-wide anti-profiteering campaign conducted by the government during and since the war.

The effect of the decision is to leave no safeguard for the public against the speculator, cornerer and profiteer in the necessities of life. It frees hundreds of those convicted and sentenced to prison terms and dismisses thousands of prosecutions pending in the courts.

The decision is based upon a technicality. Congress failed to prohibit "any specific and definite acts" which was construed to bring the act under the inhibition of the fifth and sixth amendments so "these sections do not constitute a fixing by congress of an ascertainable standard of guilt and are not adequate to inform persons accused of violations thereof of the nature and cause of the accusation against them."

If the courts of the country are to invalidate important laws like this enacted in the public welfare upon hair-splitting technicalities and undo the work of congress, there should be some provision made wherein these laws are submitted to the court and their legality passed upon before enactment rather than afterward, thereby effecting a national saving in litigation and cost of government. As it is, nobody knows whether any act passed by congress is valid until years after its enactment.

The Restless Sex

By Robert Chambers, Author of "Barbarians," "The Dark Star," etc. (Copyrighted 1914 by Robert W. Chambers.)

"It's the only safety for us. There's no use. No hope, either. And it's too dangerous—with no outlook, no possible chance that waiting may help us. There's not a ghost of a chance that we ever can marry. That is the real peril for us. . . . So I'll play the game, I'll go to him now—before it's too late—before you and I have made each other wretched for life—and before I have something still worse on my conscience!"
"What?"
"My husband's death! He'll kill himself if I let you take me away somewhere."
After a silence he said in a low voice:
"Is that what you have been afraid of?"
"Yes."
"You believe he will kill himself if you divorce him?"
"I—I am certain of it."
"Why are you certain?"
"I can't tell you why."
He said coolly:
"Men don't do that sort of thing as a rule. Weak intellects seek that refuge from trouble; but his is not a weak character."
"I won't talk about it," she said.
"I've told you more than I ever meant to. Now you know where I stand, what I fear—his death!—if I dishonor dad's memory and go away with you. And if I ask divorce, he will give it to me—and then kill himself. Do you think I could accept even you on such terms as these?"
"No," he said.
He looked at her intently. She stood there very white, now, her gray eyes and the masses of chestnut hair accentuating her pallor.
"All right," he said, "I'll take you to town."
"You need not."
"Won't you let me?"
"Yes, if you wish. . . . When you go downstairs, tell them to send up my trunks. Tell one of the maids to come."
"You can't go off this way, tonight. You've two guests here," he said in a dull voice.
"You will be here."
"No."
"Why not?"
"Oswald called me on the long distance wire an hour ago. He has asked me to go to town and for the fountain. I said I'd go," look at the sketch he had made.
She dropped to the couch and sat there with gray eyes remote, remote, her shoulders, in their jeweled kimono, huddled under her heavy mass of hair.
"Stay here for a while, anyway," he said. "There's no use taking such action until you have thought it over. And such action is not necessary, Steve."
"It is."
"No. There is a much simpler solution for us both. I shall go abroad."
"What?" she exclaimed sharply, lifting her head.
"Of course. Why should you be driven into the arms of a husband you do not love just because you are afraid of what you and little team pitted against a good big team with Franklin in the role of the good big team and easily winning by the score of 35 to 18. The players from the Rose City played with consummate skill, showed good team work, deadly basket shooting and were easily the best balanced team to show their wares during the afternoon.

The classic of the evening games was the battle between Baker, eastern Oregon representatives, and Mollala, northern Willamette valley, champions. The game was bitterly contested, marked with clever basketball playing and extreme close checking. Coach "Admiral" Dewey, and his men, had a narrow escape from suffering a defeat as the Mollala team succeeded in maintaining a lead until the last few minutes of play when by a series of good passes combined with the clever work of R. Stoddard, center, Baker emerged from the setto victors by the score of 25 to 17. Ridings, forward, was the whole show for the Mollala, although he was ably assisted by his rangy teammates.

McGinnis, forward, experienced little opposition in their game against the Heppner five, romping away with a victory by 44 to 19. McGinnis, guard, was the best performer for the Coos bay team. Alker, forward, played consistently for the losers.

Superior condition and consistent team work brought home the "bacon" for the Eugene team when they defeated Ashland by the score of 24 to 20. The game was a "nip and tuck" battle, with the final outcome in doubt until the last few minutes when Ashland seemed to tire, permitting the Eugene team to forge ahead and thereby win the game. Both teams displayed clever underhand passing and basket shooting ability.

The game this evening, which in the semi-final, promises to be of classic of the tournament as the teams likely to contend in this game will be of equal ability. Baker, Franklin, Salem, Eugene are four teams that have displayed unusual ability and a game between any of these teams will be bitterly contested. Two Beavercreek, Raley and Jackson, officiated during the afternoon games, while Ralph Coleman of O. A. C. was the referee during the evening games. He will also officiate this evening.

The summaries for yesterday's games follow:

Rail Wage Reduction

ing made, it was said, with no attempt at concerted action by the railroads.
Workers Are Silent.
It became known that the association at a meeting in New Haven Conn., March 4, adopted a resolution that it was the sense of the meeting that reductions in the pay of skilled employees were not considered objectionable by the executives.

The matter then was referred to the individual roads.
From the labor side little comment was heard on the proposed reductions in unskilled employees' wages. It was said that the matter would have to come before the labor board and that the union's chief concern now was to see that the roads acted in accordance with the transportation act.

SLEEPY-TIME TALES THE TALE OF BENNY BADGER BY ARTHUR SCOTT BAILEY

The New Home

When Benny Badger went wandering off to find a safer and pleasanter neighborhood in which to make a new home for himself, he had no idea at all as to where he should go. He only knew that he wanted to get a good, long distance away from the place where he had been living.
Wherever he decided to settle, it must be some spot where the ungrateful rancher wouldn't be likely to find him, and set a trap in his doorway again.

On and on Benny travelled, until at last he met a spry young chap—one of the deer mouse family—who stopped still and stared at Benny as if he would like to speak to him, but didn't quite dare to.
"Hello!" said Benny Badger. "Do you live around here?"
The deer mouse answered politely with a nod, as if he would like to talk, if he weren't too shy.
"Do you find this an agreeable neighborhood?" Benny Badger inquired.

"Very!" the deer mouse replied in a thin, piping voice.
"Is there plenty of good water nearby?" Benny asked him.
"Yes, indeed!" the deer mouse exclaimed. "There's a water-hole right over there!" And he pointed over his shoulder, without taking his eyes off Benny Badger. He knew it was safer to keep close watch of strangers.
Benny sat down. He hid journeyed a long way and he was tired.

for one reason or another he soon changed his mind, and started to dig a different hole a short distance from the first one.
Soon he had begun no less than five holes, only to leave each one unfinished, the deer mouse interrupted him with a sharp cry.
"Stop! Stop!" he begged Benny. "Please don't do that!"
Benny Badger paused and stared at him in amazement.
"What is it?" he asked. "What's he matter?"
The deer mouse was all a-flutter.
