Horsfall To Lecture Thursday

Containing an interesting story for practically every one of his beautiful pictures of birds and flowers. R. Bruce Horsfall, America's foremost natural history artist, is in Salem all this week. He may be found each afternoon sitting at the Audubon society exhibit of pictures of birds and flowers on display in the treatment rooms of the Salem Public Library. Mr. Horsfall will tell the stories of his pictures and answer any questions about them anyone who wishes to talk to him. This is in itself perhaps the most treat of the entire occasion. Mr. Horsfall whose home is in Portland, Oregon, has taken up natural history work not as a recent acquisition but as a hobby and his work before he was painting portraits. In 1894 Mr. Horsfall was engaged by the National association of Audubon societies, of which William W. Brewster was president, to paint pictures. This was part of a campaign at that time to educate people to know birds and to stop the wholesale killing of them to secure ornaments for women's hats. Mr. Horsfall illustrated many nature stories for the Century magazine and St. Nicholas and many books have been published with his illustrations. In 1913 he painted the pictures used in "Land Mammals of the Western Hemisphere," published by McMillan.

Another big piece of work done by Mr. Horsfall was the illustration of a report of a Princeton expedition to Patagonia, which work he did at Princeton over a period of ten years. He has drawn native wild life in many parts of the United States and in India, Ceylon, Borneo and England.

Mr. Horsfall will lecture on the subject "The Painting of Bird Pictures" on Thursday night and will deal with the methods of handling the birds and with the reproduction of the pictures. He will explain how they get into the books and why when printed the pictures are not as satisfactory as the originals.

Mr. Horsfall has many interesting stories to tell about birds whose pictures are shown in the exhibit. Many of these subjects were raised from the nestling stage in an aviary at Shawnee, Pennsylvania, where Mr. Horsfall had charge for a number of years. A bluebird and a meadow lark whose pictures are displayed were raised from nestlings there. A picture of a cardinal which Mr. Horsfall has in his collection is one which he painted for Woodrow Wilson with whom he had an acquaintance and friendship cultivated during his years at Princeton when Mr. Wilson was president of the university. When the picture was finished, Mr. Horsfall thought he could do better and so painted another which he presented Mr. Wilson. In the background of the picture is the tower of Nassau, at Princeton university.

What's New On The Market

White Leghorn fry weighing less than two pounds were turned down on the market this morning. Shippers and dealers who supply poultry for the local trade refused them because of their being too small. A price of 18 cents a pound was offered by one dealer, but turned down. If poultry raisers will keep their Leghorn fry for two weeks longer they will be larger size and a better price can be obtained.

Razor clams are very scarce on the market at present. Some local dealers won't handle them because they die during the warm weather before reaching here.

The high water on the Willamette and Columbia is reported to have affected the salmon fishing. However, the supply here continues to be good and the price of 25 cents a pound has not changed. Moonlight nights have some effect on the fishing in the southern streams. The water is exceptionally clear there and the fish can see the nets and avoid them.

Green peas have not been on the market for the last two days. There will be a fresh supply tomorrow which will be continuous until the local product is on the market. New Walla Walla asparagus was received today but the price was not quoted from the wholesale dealers. White radishes, known as "icicles", appeared today at 10 cents a bunch. The little egg plant that is being sold brings 15 cents a pound. Sweet potatoes are still two pounds for a quarter.

Large fancy lemons are selling for 25 cents a dozen which is exceptionally reasonable.

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Buchner and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Champlain spent yesterday in Portland.

The poppies are made of silk and are being sold to supply a fund for the American relief committee for the orphaned French children.

The poppies will be worn all over the United States on Memorial day and some churches and fraternal bodies of Salem have already placed their orders with the Salem War Mothers.

No one should fail to wear a Flanders poppy on Memorial day and they are for sale beginning this afternoon at the Central drug store through the kindness of Col. A. T. Woolpert.

Clinic For Babies At End, Report

Although tomorrow is the day for the baby clinic, which has been held regularly once a month for the past two years, there will be no clinic, said Mrs. John Carson, president of the clinic. The work has to be dropped because the county health nurse has been removed. Mrs. Carson said, and the clinic hopes to resume its duties when a county health nurse is again provided for Marion county.

The work of the nurse has been vital to the life of the clinic, because it was she who found the needy cases in her rounds and sent them to the clinic for examination. Here they were examined by specialists and in many cases were given the medical attention and surgical care that they needed. And following this attention came the most vital work of the nurse as it was she who watched them after they were put back into their homes, schools and old environments. "The doctors have given their services gladly and free of charge," Mrs. Carson declared, "but they will not go on doing it unless the county nurse is assured so that follow up work may be done."

Mrs. Carson expressed for the women in charge of the clinic their appreciation for the free services of the doctors, surgeons, nurses, dentists and the Deaconess hospital where rooms, services and anesthetics have been given free of charge. She also expressed appreciation for the ready support of the women of Salem who have devoted their time to the clinic and helped in many ways, especially to Mrs. W. H. Byrd, a specialist in her line, who has given mental examinations for the clinic.

There has never been an appeal for funds for the clinic and the only financial support it has had in addition to that given voluntarily by people especially interested has been the twenty five cents charged as a fee of each mother bringing her child. All services of specialists and nurses have been given free of charge. In this way children of parents who were financially unable to have them examined and cared for have received care and been given the right start in life. About six hundred children have been examined during the two years of the life of the clinic.
