N. C. Kafoury has just returned from the east where he has been for the past two months purchasing stock for the new store. He states that good merchandise is very hard to obtain while cheap merchandise is plentiful and by going through the mills and wholesale houses he was enabled to procure the best to be had at the then prevailing low market prices. The outlook for the future has greatly improved and is very promising. Readjustments are taking place rapidly and there is a promise of big business for fall. Mills and wholesalers say that now prices are lower than they ever will be.

Through great trials and tribulations it is now accomplished. A first class Turkish, steam, shower and plunge bath house. Yes, a second to none face and body massage establishment. Yes, sir, an up to date manicuring department. Yes, sires, this has all been brought about by the Oregon Bath house manager's stick-to-itiveness. Salem can now be proud of her public bath house. Poor plumbing work first installed had to be torn out and other plumbing work done. Labor and material had to be doubly borne by Mr. Purdy and doubly paid for to satisfy courts of justice. But we should worry so long as we are able to give the public good service. Oregon Bath house, 137

Students Of Salem Honored

Scholastic Society Elects Three Local People; Dr. Bolton Speaks

"Efficiency in gainful occupation, unmodified by higher ideals, results in selfishness and sordidness," said Dr. Frederick E. Bolton, dean of the college of education at the University of Washington, who spoke at the last morning chapel of the year, especially for the members of Alpha Kappa Nu whose election was announced this morning. Three Salem students, Robbin E. Fisher, Elsie R. Lippold and Alice R. Welch, were among the ten elected.

The purpose of education should serve to awaken higher instincts, the speaker emphasized, as well as to equip the student so he can better gain his livelihood. "Education should arouse many noble emotions, and emotions are the mainspring of life." The great social and moral questions of the world, he continued to point out, require in addition to practical skill, a whole heartedness and generosity which it is the function of higher education to give. The speaker sketched briefly the advances made in education within the past few decades, from the day of the Civil war, when but 40 public high schools offering a four year course were to be found in the country, until the present day when more than 2,000,000 children attend approximately 10,000 high schools over the country.

"Educational problems are receiving more attention now than ever before," said Dr. Bolton. "All the nations that suffered in the past war see in it a means of salvation from the problems that press upon them." During the war, he stated, England voted more money for education in the very blackest moments than she had ever done before.

Among the most enthusiastic supporters of the movement towards higher standards than ever in education, according to the speaker, are those who have been denied the privileges of learning when they should have been in school. Those who have succeeded in spite of their handicaps should not be pointed out as examples disproving the value of education; they were able to surmount their difficulties regardless of the lack of early advantages.

In closing, Dr. Bolton prophesied a still greater importance in the future of education as a factor in success. "The task of education will become one of the biggest on the earth," he said.

Others elected to the honor society were Frank Bennett, Gooding, Idaho; Lawrence E. Davies, St. Helens; Maurice W. Lawson, Blanchard, Wash; Myrtle Mason, Boise, Idaho; Fay Peringer, Bellingham, Wash; Helen Satchell, Shedd, and Sibly E. Smith, Vancouver, Wash.

"Farewell to Willamette," sung publicly but once a year, according to the campus traditions, was rendered this morning.
