Oregon Leads All

Oregon was the fourteenth state to authorize a bond issue for soldiers bonus. Six other states have not yet voted on referendum measures submitted by their legislatures. Only one other state, California, has provided aid for ex-soldiers in obtaining land and homes by long time loans, and the amount voted was only $18,000,000 as against Oregon's $30,000,000.

The states providing bonuses are Maine, giving a bonus of $100 to each of its soldiers and sailors; Massachusetts, $100; Michigan, $15 for each month in service; Minnesota, $15 a month; New Hampshire, $100 flat; New Jersey, $10 for each month served, with a maximum of $250, for returned soldiers and sailors who were living in this state at the time the bonus was voted on in November, 1920; Rhode Island, $100; Vermont, $10 for each month, with a maximum of $120; Washington, $15 a month, maximum $465; Wisconsin, $15 for each month served; North Dakota, $25 for each month, and South Dakota, $15 a month with a maximum of $400.

In August of this year, Missouri will vote upon the pending referendum measure. In November, 1922, Kansas will vote upon $25,000,000 bonds, Iowa upon $22,000,000 bonds, and Illinois upon $55,000,000 bonds. To authorize a bonus in Pennsylvania it is necessary to have a bill for a constitutional amendment pass two sessions of the legislature and then be submitted to the people at a general election. The bill has passed one session. If it passes the session of 1922 it will be voted upon by the people in 1923. It calls for $35,000,000. Montana has yet to vote upon the bonus.

It will be seen that none of the states have authorized as large an expenditure in proportion to resources as Oregon despite the heavy taxation entailed and none of these have treated those called to the front as generously. It is another case of Oregon first. It is to be hoped that the measure accomplishes all that its advocates promised for the welfare of the former soldiers, sailors and marines, some of whom have been loud in their censure of the public's "ingratitude."

Prosperous Germany

Colonel House declares after a tour of Germany that the country is on a good business basis. The allied blockade prevented Germany from spending her money abroad or from running into debt except to her own people. She owes no money except the indemnity.

British business men, returned from a trip through Germany, report that the German people are better clothed, better shod, and better fed than many of the Allied peoples. After traveling from Cologne to Leipzig they found not an inch of soil remained uncultivated, not a sign of war was to be seen. In the towns there was more activity in building than in England. Germany seemed industrially strong and economically sound.

German exports to Russia from May 15 to December 31, 1920, amounted to 204,100,000 marks, of which the principal items were 145,700,000 marks for agricultural implements and automobile parts; 27,000,000 marks for electrical goods; and 19,000,000 marks for drugs, chemicals, dyes and medical instruments. Manufacturers of railway stock, have completed large orders for the Belgian, Czecho-Slovakian, Norwegian and Russian governments. Manufacturers report a veritable glut of orders, especially from South Africa, France and China. Export quotations for pig iron have been greatly reduced to meet foreign competition.

Germany is apparently rapidly recovering and the people industrious and prosperous. Having suffered no devastation of territory or ruin of industry, the nation is in far better shape than most of the other belligerents whose main efforts must be directed toward restoration.

Germany is not permitted to have an army or navy. The money so saved will pay the indemnity. While the United States and other nations are taxing themselves to death with military and naval establishments, Germany is building up her industries. Germany will become wealthy and prosperous paying the indemnity while the allies are going bankrupt preparing for war. Thus Germany will enjoy the benefits of peace that victory would have robbed her of.

It was all right with the senate as long as Admiral Sims praised Britain and assailed America to the embarrassment of a democratic administration, but let him attack the Sinn Feiners to the embarrassment of a republican president and how the senate squirms! Funny how much more sensitive politicians are about the Irish than about their own country.

Portland had a strawberry riot because women objected to paying $1.85 a crate for berries that the grower only received 75 cents for, and the market master refused to permit the growers to sell at 95 cents. Just how it is worth more to sell berries than it is to grow, pick, crate and transport them is something some people can not understand.

Despite fraud warnings printed by The Capital Journal local merchants are out some hundreds of dollars for advertising contracted in a fly-by-night labor paper printed in San Francisco and sponsored by the local labor council under promise of installing a plant in Salem. The concern is bankrupt.

The Statesman contains a eulogy of George E. Chamberlain's patriotism. Yet last fall it shamelessly slandered and vilified him and attacked not only his patriotism but his unquestioned integrity. All of which shows the sincerity of the partisan newspaper.

A Woman Who Wouldn't Remarry

By IDA H. McGLONE GIBSON
The Noted Writer

Her Mother's Sermon
"That is what I am trying to make you understand, Alicia," said mother. "A man may fall in love with a woman at sight, but he will not be in love with her. Do you realize what I mean? If you do, I think it will take a great deal of your doubt about the meeting between Hal and Nell

Marshall away. Men, both married and single, fall in and out of love often, which is only an act of passion or an emotional interest that seldom has any sanction of cool reason. It is a most potent enchantment, however, and we are always prone to think it is the supreme miracle. Perhaps it is—the supreme miracle that old

Nature performs eternally, but either because Nature grows tired or because she is not omnipotent, the miracle goes no further. Then must come the cool affection that cements the true marriage. There is nothing miraculous about this. It is as commonplace as three meals a day. I am almost sure, dear, from what you have told me, that during the last few hours that you and Hal were together, that you both had fallen in love all over again. I am glad you can have that sweet memory.

"I sometimes think, mother, that I fell in love with Hal for the first time, then," I interrupted.

"Of course you did, dear. Poets have sung songs and books have been written to explain the fact that a man or woman in love insists that he or she has never been in love before and will never be again. And yet I have almost come to the conclusion that this ability to fall in love with your own husband or your own wife over and over again, is one of the things that makes marriage bearable. The woman who is able by some trick of variety or personality to believe her an absolutely new love each time is the one who is going to be the most successful wife. But between these times, my dear, on a mountain top, there must be another love. A love of sobriety and contentment, a love understanding instead of thrill which will thrive on habit and passion. The woman who finds this out early is the one who is going to come into her own."

"You hardly lived long enough with Hal, my dear, to learn all this, and I am afraid that you are going to have a good many episodes in the years to come, which will need much careful thought to steer you out of them without hurting yourself or anyone else."

"Many people talk about the provocative temptation that a young widow exercises, but they say nothing about the anomalous positions she occupies in society. No man treats her with the same reverence that he does a young girl. He pursues her with greater ardor, for he is sure in the belief that she will understand. This is the reason that I am preaching you this little sermon because I want you to be able to take care of yourself. People are much more censorious of a widow than they are of a young girl. I should not have said this to you, my dear, if you had not told me of Larry's outbreak. You are a woman, Alicia, who will always attract men. You will probably have many chances to marry again. Yet I am not sure that you would make as good a wife for any man as Barbara. Poor Barbara will always give the man she loves much more encouragement than you, and even then he may not think that he wants her for his wife."

"I shall never marry again," I said decisively. "I have my boy, and I am sure that he can make up to me the sum and substance of my happiness."

I looked up and saw Duane coming across the tennis court. He was a splendid looking chap. I did not wonder that Barbara was fond of him.

"Aren't Bab and Duane engaged yet, mother?" I asked.

"No, my dear. At least she has not told me that they are. I sometimes feel sorry for poor Bab. She is desperately in love with Duane, and I am sure that he would be very happy with her, but Duane is one of those men who hates to give up his freedom and Bab is not clever enough to make him think that he might be free though married to her."

It seemed rather strange to me that mother should have amplified almost the same things about love and marriage that Bab had told me just before. In fact, mother's whole talk with me was very different than anything she had ever said to me before my marriage, but in thinking it over I decided that probably Bab had opened up the subject with mother, for my sister wasn't reticent in the slightest about her love affairs. To her, getting married was the one great business of woman-kind, and I knew she would be very apt to ask mother's expert advice on the subject and pass what she said on to me in hopes I also had something to offer.

Dad called mother away from the court just as Duane came up and sat down beside me.

"Mighty glad to see you, Alix. I was afraid at one time that you were not going to pull through. Poor old Hal. You know, of course, that Hal was my best friend, and that I miss him more than I can say. For his sake I shall be only too glad to help you in any way possible."

Duane was running true to form. Now that I was not the unattainable woman I had lost attraction for him. He could not resist making love to me as the wife of his best friend, but it was much against his peculiar code of ethics to speak words of love to his friend's widow—she might make him prove them.

Hums Ask Spy Activities Of French Stop

Berlin, June 10.—The Prussian state government has asked the German federal government to address a note to the French commission complaining that the French military spy service is hiring German criminals to commit thefts of German official papers.

The French intelligence service conducts a regular camp of trained German second story men in Griesheim near Darmstadt, explained an official of the Prussian ministry of the interior to the International News Service. German volunteers who are found untraced for admission to the French foreign legion and who have a criminal record are asked if they do not wish to enroll in the French intelligence service, it is alleged.

The camp at Griesheim is conducted by First Lieutenant Lafond assisted by Lieutenants Robert and Baret. The Prussian government has complete testimony in several cases. A German who had enlisted in this service under Lieutenant Lafond was assigned to break into the desk of an active German captain in Darmstadt to steal official military papers.

The man alleged that he told Lieutenant Lafond he couldn't do the job alone and asked for an assistant. Another man was assigned and the burglar reported the facts to the Darmstadt police. By agreement the police arrested the two as they entered the captain's room, and the second man is alleged to have also made a complete confession.

High Prices Paid for Papers
The Prussian government claims that it has a similar confession from a man arrested stealing military papers in Freiburg. The circus of trained burglars is not paid except for jobs accomplished, and then in accordance with the value of the papers brought back, the state's witnesses are said to have confessed. Then the pay varies from ten to twenty thousand marks for the job. In the meantime they get free board and lodging in the Griesheim camp.

Another case reported in the official documents which the Prussian minister of the interior has placed at the disposal of the foreign office is the confession of a German sailor who says he was compelled to write to comrades still in the German navy, offering them a reward if they could secure copies of the German naval codes for him. Copies of these letters, allegedly dictated by Lieutenant Roberts, are attached to the evidence.

New Japanese War Minister Is Announced

Hanso Yamanashi, lieutenant general in the Japanese army, has been appointed minister of war to take the place of Lieutenant General Giuchi Tanaka, whose resignation was placed in the hands of Premier Hara late in April.

General Yamanashi, who has been minister of war since 1917, was born in 1855 and entered the army as a sub-lieutenant of infantry in 1886. He was chief of staff of the Japanese army during the siege of Tsing-Tai, which was captured from the Germans during the great war.

Professor Raymond Pearl, of the U. S. Public Health Service, has discovered that both the suddenness and the destructiveness of the first flu epidemic coincides significantly with the normal death rate from heart diseases in many American cities. It does not so coincide with the death rate of any other important disorder. The inference is obvious.

Strawberries for Canning
With the opening of the canneries it is apparent that the market for berries has stabilized and there will be no further dumping of fruit at ruinous prices to the grower. With the moderate price for sugar and the low cost of berries every household should supply themselves with plenty of this luscious fruit for next winter's use. For Saturday and the first few days of next week we will have big supplies of Wilsons and Clark Seedling berries which we think are the best for canning.
