What's New On The Market

Corn prices ought to be lower. The general price, retail, is 40 cents a dozen. Retailers claim that the wholesale price is being held up by oriental gardeners. If this is true the merchants ought to find some way of buying from outside sources.

Pineapples are very scarce on the market at present and those offered look very scrubby. They are selling for twenty five cents. Lettuce has increased to 15 cents a head. The local stuff looks very coarse.

Cantaloupe are now down to very reasonable prices. Those which sold previously two for a quarter are now 10 cents, while the largest and best are selling for 15 cents each.

Sweet potatoes are scarce. Few of the stores have them and the price quoted is as high as formerly.

The local cabbage offered at eight cents a pound is much better in quality than the California stuff being offered at a lower price. The heads are larger and firmer.

Egg plant is offered at 25 cents a pound. It is better than anything which has heretofore been offered.
