Portland Packer and Buyer for California Firm Seek to Wreck Growers Says Lewis

Dallas, Sept. 8.—Charges that at least two men in the state outside of the membership of the Oregon Growers' Cooperative association, are attempting to disrupt the association and gain control of the organization, were flung at the fruit growers of this section who gathered to hear him speak here Saturday evening, by C. I. Lewis, assistant manager of the association.

Without mentioning names Mr. Lewis asserted that the two men to whom he had reference were a Portland packing house man and director of a Portland bank, and a fruit buyer for a California firm dealing in dried fruits.

Portland Blocked Loan

The Portlander's hand was exposed when the association was refused a loan by the clearing house association of that city. Mr. Lewis declared, as a result of this man's influence. The loan was finally transacted thru individual Portland banks.

The fruit buyer's activities have consisted principally of personal propaganda circulated among the members of the association, designed to discredit the present managers of the association and get himself named as the directing head of the association, according to Mr. Lewis.

Prices Held Too Low

Allegations that buyers of green prunes are not paying what they are worth on the basis of the present prices for dried prunes were another feature of the meeting. According to figures compiled by the association it was claimed that the following prices show the actual value of green prunes today:

Thirty-four size $1.76 a bushel; 40-50c, $1.46 a bushel; 50-60s $1.08 a bushel; 60-70s, 89 cents a bushel.

Sells Floto Circus Coming To Salem Sept. 21

When H. H. Tammen, millionaire newspaperman bought Sells-Floto circus some years ago, it was his desire to give a circus to the west. For two years he added to the show until it became large enough to go east and compete with the other big shows. Now, with three rings and two stages, Sells-Floto is acknowledged to be the largest outdoor attraction in the world. The east welcomes it like the west did.

Education As Cure For Social Unrest Is Urged

"Education was never needed so much as today to overcome the social unrest prevalent in the land," according to J. S. Landers, newly elected head of the Oregon State Normal school, who was in Salem Wednesday on his way to Monmouth to take up his new duties.

"The emphasis in educational procedure must cease to be on knowledge and efficiency chiefly, but a balanced development holding in check the exaggerated individualistic tendencies so prevalent and substituting social interests for selfishness or indifference," Landers declared in discussing the educational needs of the hour.

"There must be no lessening of effort devoted to truth-seeking, skill and industrial development but growth in character and willingness to serve must become more consciously the central aim of education.

"The added responsibility upon education places a greater significance upon the normal school. The people rely chiefly upon the normal for trained teachers. The day of the untrained teacher is passing. As the teacher becomes the unifying force and the school the organizing center for all the community agencies that educate, the normal school must meet the demand for preparation of teachers capable of being community leaders.

"I am glad to return to the best state in the union to join hands with those who would enlarge the opportunities of the boys and girls of the commonwealth and who will work persistently for better material, social and educational conditions."

The combustion of gasoline generates a heat of about 3000 degrees Fahrenheit. Cylinder walls operate at about 300 degrees. Lubricating oils break down under this intense heat, impairing the piston oil seal.

Withstands Decomposition Under Terrific Engine Heat

Only an oil of the highest lubricating value can stand up under engine heat ranging from 100 to 3000 degrees Fahrenheit. Oils containing "sulpho" compounds decompose quickly when exposed to this heat. Decomposition is marked by impaired lubricating film between moving parts, by loss of compression and power, by reduced lubricating efficiency and by damage to the engine.
