Efforts to properly finance the Salem Symphony Orchestra are under way by public spirited citizens so as to place the organization upon a firm financial basis and establish it as one of the permanent features of Salem's musical and social life. The effort will consist in an appeal to the public to purchase season tickets for the four concerts given annually, and a less amount is asked than is pledged the various lyceum organizations for their mixed seasonal programs.

Salem is the smallest city in the country to boast a symphony orchestra, which is usually the proud possession of large cities. Seldom are there sufficient musicians in a small city to make such an organization possible and their presence in the city contributes an asset that should be taken advantage of.

The orchestra consists of some sixty musicians, each an artist on his instrument, who play for the love of music and not for the money in it. The success of the orchestra hinges, of course, upon the skill of the director, and Salem is fortunate in not only having the musicians, but a conductor of unusual ability in the person of Dr. John R. Stites, and both successfully demonstrated in their initial efforts last season what can be done.

The mere possession of a symphony orchestra makes Salem the musical center of the state, outside of Portland. It is evidence of the culture and refinement of the community. About it the musical life of the city revolves, and it plays an important part in making life in Salem worth while.

The orchestra this year is larger than a year ago and more instruments are utilized. The experience already acquired assures constantly improving renditions of musical masterpieces. What the brass band is to the untutored, the symphony orchestra is to the cultivated, a stimulus to artists, a joy to music lovers and a source of pleasure to the public.

Every one who can should co-operate with their patronage to make the symphony orchestra an enduring success.

"Portland is rich. Her per capita wealth is probably greater of any other city west of the Mississippi" declares Richard Spillane, financial expert of the Philadelphia Public Ledger in a copy-righted article in the Oregonian. If this is the case, why is it necessary for this rich city to ask Oregon tax-payers to finance the Portland 1925 exposition?

ALICIA HAMMERSLEY
A Woman Who Wouldn't Remarry
By IDAH MCGILONE GIBSON
The Noted Writer

New of Duane
With trembling fingers Bab tore open the envelope. Then without a word she handed the message to me, and stood as if carved in stone, so pale and still was she, while I read:
"Duane Benton not on the La France. Left ship on pilot boat a few miles out from New York. Passenger list address is fifty-six Par Avenue, New York."
"E. C. Griffith, Captain La France."
"The address was that of our apartment in the city."
"What does it mean?" demanded Bab, her voice sounding as though her life-blood was ebbing from her heart.
"I can't imagine. Get on your wraps and we will find out whether Tom Latham or Mr. Larrabee know anything."
"Oh, Alice, you don't think anything has happened. He took the pilot boat back to New York."
"Then he has been here over 24 hours. Oh, let's hurry, let's hurry! Maybe he really went back to the apartment."
"Of course he would not do that. Bab. Neither do I think that he is at the club. If he had been there Tom Latham would have told me when I called him up last evening."
"Perhaps he has gone out of his mind."
"Don't be a goose."
"Don't you think that we had better telephone. I can't wait until I get into the city."
"It will take us about as long to get Larrabee's office by telephone as to go in. Hurry up."
I confess this new turn of affairs made me nervous. I could imagine nothing that would bring Duane back after he had gone three miles out to sea.
Very soon we were at Mr. Larrabee's office and we found that he knew no more about Duane's return than we.
I called up Tom from there or rather I called up the club but could not get him. Bab persisted in her determination not to go with me to lunch with him and I persuaded her to go with Mr. Larrabee.
"Take her to buy a hat, Mr. Larrabee," I urged as we parted on the sidewalk in front of his office.
"Yes, Mr. Larrabee, I mean it, derstand."

Don't you know of the consolations of recent widowhood is depending upon the lengthening of one's veil and whether one should have the hat lined with black or white crepe?" Mr. Larrabee looked quite shocked and I realized then that that was a secret of my sex which I should not have told.
I found Tom waiting for me at the club.
"Tom," I demanded, "did you tell me everything you knew about Duane last evening when you asked me if I had heard the latest news?"
"Tom looked rather sheepish. "You do know something," I charged. "Where is Duane Benton? Why did he get off that boat? Is he ill or crazy?"
"He declares he is neither," grinned Tom, "but I think he is a little of both. Just before you telephoned to me he walked in at the club. I wanted to tell you that he had returned, but he would not let me."
"Did you tell him about the wireless?"
"Yes. Duane wanted to go to your sister immediately. I tried to explain to him that his sudden appearance would probably kill her, but he would not have it so. He kept saying: 'Don't tell her, don't tell her. I want to surprise her.'"
"I knew," he said, "when I had that irresistible desire to come back with the pilot that I was needed here. Now I know Latham that it was Bab's love that was drawing me back. I am going to her. And I am not going to have our meeting spoiled by permitting the news to be relayed through you, her sister and finally to Bab over the telephone. Don't you dare tell her. I am leaving immediately. He should have been with your sister. He rushed away half an hour ago."
"We must have missed him on the way. He probably went by the Post road and we came in by the other."
"Well, he is with her now anyway."
"Oh, no. Bab went with Mr. Larrabee to lunch and to buy a hat."
"Good Lord."
I determined not to tell that momentous feminine hat-secret to another man. He would not understand.

Increase Tax Upon Alcohol

Washington, Oct. 7.—A tax of $4 a gallon on all alcoholic spirits withdrawn from bond for industrial, medicinal or any other purpose, has been agreed upon by republican leaders as a part of the new tax revision program. This is an increase of $1.80 a gallon and is expected to yield $75,000,000 additional revenue each year.

The proposal to repeal the $2000 exemption allowed corporations that it would work too great a hardship on the small corporations. The leaders also were said to have decided on a flat corporation income tax of 15 per cent in place of a ten and fifteen per cent rates.

About 150 acres of stubble and straw on the J. N. Williams farm at Enderby, Wasco County, were burned over last week. Two straw stacks valued at more than $700 were totally destroyed.

Tabloid Sermons For Busy People by Parson Abiel Haile

"Favor is deceitful and beauty is vain; but a woman that feareth the Lord shall be praised."—Prov. 31:31.

Solomon, who knew more about women than any man who ever lived (and he admitted they were more or less a mystery to him) reserved his most profoundly wise proverb until the closing verse of his last chapter of the proverbs, that wondrous compendium of human wisdom. He had seen them grow, from girlhood to toothless hag awaiting the call, and when he made his final summing up and conclusion, he told us all he knew. His proverb must be taken as an entirety. In his sentence is plain that he condemned reliance upon mere favor and beauty alone, without a soul of the God-fearing type. There are plenty of well-favored and popular women, radiant in their beauty, who fear God and because of that are honored. But it is a singular fact that the women of worth are not of the type of social grace and physical exquisiteness that causes their charms to adorn magazine covers. If a girl is gracious and handsome, she will, if wise, place no dependence upon them whatever; for favor and beauty of the external fade and wither. Think over the list of great women, and of those unknown to fame, too, and ponder. In the hour of trial, would you seek the consoling spirit of a Florence Nightingale, or a Madame Pompadour? A Josie Mansfield, or Julia Ward Howe? A Frances Willard or Catherine Medici? Women who cultivate grace and adorn a body to lure a man, are silly. The man who will be attracted by such artistry, surely will leave it when a fresher bloom is available. Then comes the heartbreak and the end of self-respect. Girls, better take Solomon's sage comment to heart. There is no need to disfigure a comely face, or wear a Mother Hubbard; but there is the paramount need of building for time by fearing God and cultivating the inner grace that comes from first meriting His favor. The higher, nobler regard of mankind will follow and endure as long as you live.

Need Men To Strengthen Football Team

At a rally at the Willamette university this morning the central theme was a plea for men to turn out for football captain Zeller, Ralph Barnum, Bain, Professor Punzo, Coach Bohler each spoke. It was emphasized that in order Willamette to have a strong team in the future it is necessary for freshmen to turn out.

Coach Bohler called attention to the fact that at the game Oregon Willamette's morale was good but her football was not. He said that although much experience was on the team they were handicapped and not to do, simply because of the presence of a couple of inexperienced men on the team. The coach pressed disappointment over the fact that there has been a shortage of men on the field this year for practice.

Professor Punzo, head of department of economics, a football man himself, praised student body for its clean attitude and for its practice of refraining from throwing mud; then for a solidarity of school that will enable Willamette small school, to defeat larger universities. He said, "A small school with clean athletics can turn out to a great event and win into victory."

All football men, and all wish to turn out for football, then asked to sign pledges for broken attendance at past thirty-five men signed the pledge.

Wenatchee, Wash., Oct. 7.—Declaring that a loss of millions of dollars to fruit will result if steps are not taken immediately to supply cars, growers and shippers of the Wenatchee district, with the purpose of fixing the responsibility, are to attack the American Railway association car pool in the courts. Representatives of the growers and shippers met here yesterday and it is planned to employ a law firm of national reputation to investigate the legal aspect of the car shortage and to determine what recourse shippers have.

Olcott Favors Roosevelt Day

In a statement to the press today Governor Olcott expresses his approval of the nation-wide movement for the observance of the sixty-third anniversary of the birth of Theodore Roosevelt on Thursday, October 27.

"The exceptional service rendered to the country by this man, his ideal life and his high standard of citizenship shown in a practical way, are splendid things to keep before the people of our country at all times," the governor's statement reads. "He was a true American and it is a wholesome thing to always have before us examples of true Americanism."

"I trust the people of the state on that day will stop for a time at least to give thought to the memory of Theodore Roosevelt and his career as an American."

Whiskey Well In Knoxville

Knoxville, Tenn., Oct. 7.—Police have discovered a "well" of whiskey in a residential section of the city. A small copper pipe from a copper tank sunk ten feet under the ground enabled the owner to keep a supply of moonshine whiskey on tap at all hours. The whiskey was forced through a faucet by a hand pump. The outfit was confiscated and the owner arraigned in police court.
