What's New On The Market

By Rex Stewart

Following the drop in Portland, local bakeries and grocery stores have reduced their price on the 1 1/2 pound loaf of bread from 15 to 14 cents. The price of the smaller loaf remains the same. It is not likely that there will be any reduction in pastry since it is not standardized. The decrease is due to a drop in flour.

New bulk dates will be on the market tomorrow for about 20 cents a pound. This is slightly higher than the price of new figs, but is warranted because of the distance of shipment.

Local spinach has been selling for sometime at 15 cents a pound, but by tomorrow California stuff will be on the market at about three pounds for 25 cents. Some retailers contend that in holding the price of local spinach up to 10 cents a pound, growers are asking too much. Other merchants state that the difference of three to four cents between the prices of local and California spinach is justifiable because of the freshness and better appearance of the former. It seems, however, that with everything else down, growers could afford to reduce their war time prices on green vegetables, for the same is true of radishes and other products.

Rabbits will sell for 35 cents a pound tomorrow. They are in fine condition and good eating.

Shoppers must not forget that markets close all over the city tomorrow evening at seven o'clock.
