Forbid Girls Dancing With Other Girls

Willamette university's board of directors has scored a point which is a trifle more unique and somewhat in advance of the action taken by the common, or garden, variety of dance reformers. At Willamette, girls may not even dance with other girls. The board so ordered at a recent meeting, it became known yesterday. According to the school paper: "Many of the girls had not considered this a violation of the college ruling on dancing as it was confined to the girls themselves, and provided an opportunity for needed exercise. Be it said, however, that it was never more than a minority of the girls who indulged in the exercise."

Prices of Meat

Beef price to the producer show somewhat the same difference, when they reach the hands of the consumer. The price on top steers, locally, is six cents a pound. The wholesale butcher's price is 12 and 12 1/2 cents, and the price of sirloin and round steaks in the retail shops is equally 25 cents a pound with rib roasts at 22 cents. The price paid by the consumer is more than four times as great as that paid to the producer. Portland retail price on sirloin steaks are 18 to 22 cents, 20 to 25 cents on round steaks, and rib roasts, 15 to 30 cents. Today's quotations on lambs give the price received by the producer as 7 1/2 cents. There are all kinds of lamb cuts and prices ranging between 10, 20 and 30 cents, with the loss on one cut being made up by the profit on another. Portland retail prices are quoted on similar cuts as 22 to 30 cents. Prices on bacon and ham in Portland and Salem differ widely, bacon being listed here from 25 to 55 cents while in Portland it is being sold at 30 and 60 cents. Ham is quoted at 25 and 30 cents here, Portland prices being from five to 30 cents higher. Local retailers acknowledge that they do not follow the market closely with its fluctuations in prices and assert that wages and rents here have not dropped materially since the war. They also maintain that people who want the choice cuts of meat must pay for them in accordance with their scarcity and therefore account for the apparent large profit on some meats. Markets which do their own butchering must be expected to have lower prices than those who buy from packing house and wholesale butchers.

Survivors of Arctic Trip Tell Thrilling Story of Hardships

Edinburgh, Jan. 12.—A thrilling story of one of the survivors of the Stefansson Arctic expedition of 1913 was recently unfolded in the court of sessions at Edinburgh in connection with a petition to presume the death of its surgeon, Dr. Alister Forbes Mackay, of Edinburgh. W. McKinlay, the magnetician, stated that in July, 1913, the north pole party of the expedition sailed from Nome, Alaska, on the Karluk for Herschel Island. In August the Karluk was caught in the ice floes. She drifted with the ice, and during the following winter she was carried across the Arctic ocean. In the following January the vessel was crushed by the ice pack and sunk sixty miles north of Herald Island. At that time the sun had not appeared above the horizon, and the absence of light made traveling on the ice difficult and hazardous. The majority of the members determined to camp on the ice floes until the sun reappeared, but on February 5 Dr. Mackay, with three others, took provisions and supplies and set out to make for land. Seen two days later by other members, Dr. Mackay did not appear to be in good condition, but he and his companions refused all offers of assistance and transportation back to the main camp. Dr. Mackay and his companions were never seen or heard of again, though four relief vessels were sent out. Lord Ashmore held that the reasonable inference was that Dr. Mackay died on or about February 14, 1917.
