Probe of Wheat Prices Started By Trade Board

The wide margin existing between the prices paid the American farmer for his wheat during the season of 1920-1921 and the export price of the same grain has stirred the federal trade commission to action. In a letter received from the commission Monday, H. H. Corey, public service commissioner, who has interested himself in this situation as affecting Oregon, is asked to cooperate with the federal commission in its investigation by tabulating cash prices of the principal export grades of wheat at Portland, boat rates to Liverpool and insurance charges for the period from July 1, 1919, to date. The investigation of the federal trade commission is prompted by a senate resolution calling attention to the wide spread of 15 to 20 cents between cash wheat and futures throughout the marketing season of 1920-1921. Factors entering into the investigation include the freight and other costs of handling; the profit or losses of the principal exporting firms and corporations; and their subsidiary or allied companies and firms; all the fact concerning market manipulations, if any, in connection with large export transactions or otherwise; the organization, ownership, control, interrelationship, foreign subsidiaries, agencies or connections of the concerns engaged in the export of grain, including the extent of their control of the facilities used by them; the organization, methods of operation and agencies used by foreign buyers of grain in this country and other data affecting the demand for, and foreign disposition, movement and use of American exported grain.
