DOCTOR PAYS HIGH TRIBUTE TO BIRD'S SONG

London, July 24.—Not even the most petted and pampered prima donna has ever had so great a compliment paid her voice as the compliment which Dr. Casey Wood, of California, has just paid to the common British nightingale. The doctor has just completed a 6,000 mile quest in order that he might hear the British nightingale in full song.

The quest must have cost thousands of dollars. It has meant much discomfort, traveling night and day by sea, air and road, but at the end, risking pneumonia by kneeling on the damp, dewy grass, he has fulfilled his long-postponed wish.

Far away in the fastness of a Surrey woodland the doctor heard the metallic "twee-tweet" of the nightingale. He must have been disappointed, for the nightingale was a rather harsh note at times and often drives distracted inhabitants of the lonely country houses here to shy shoes at the disturber of the night rather than listen reverently to it on bended knee, as did Dr. Wood.

It is now dangerous to whisper the word nightingale in the ear of Dr. Casey Wood. It is true he came all the way to hear the songster, but he bitterly regrets ever spilling to the reporters the cause of his long journey. Since that date he has been besieged by well-meaning helpers who wanted to track their own particular nightingales for his benefit.

Bird lovers from all corners of the continent have been pestering him. They even inquired at the Embassy for him, and it was all too overpowering for him, so he had to move about incognito.

To the International News the doctor gave his impressions of the nightingale. "The result was highly successful," he said. "Toward noon of a bright sunny day the first nightingale was encountered. His deep sweet song was distinctly heard at intervals for over an hour. This demonstrated the falsity of the current belief that the bird only sings at night or in the gloaming."

"During the tramp over the beautiful downs in Surrey a dozen birds of the species were heard in full or partial song until hunger and the shades of night drove the explorer to rest."

PHYZ CASE REHEARING

heard in the former suit, and therefore, these growers should not be held to the previous record.

Another important action was through stipulation between the attorneys for both sides in which it was agreed that the year of 1921 would be ruled out of the case since there could have been little damage done the plaintiff due to the fact that the market price of loganberries was not over 3 1/2 cents.

To establish the extent of credit of the Phez company, A. C. Longshore of the Northwest National bank of Portland, and William Walton, cashier of Ladd & Bush bank of Salem were called to the stand. Longshore testified that the company's credit was good to the extent of $125,000.

Mr. Walton gave no figures regarding the firm's credit, but outlined the bank's policy in aiding the Phez company to help create a market for loganberries. The loan limit of the bank, Mr. Walton stated, was $100,000 to any concern.

H. S. Gile, former head of the plaintiff company, was also called to the stand, affirming that the maximum price of loganberries during the years of 1919 and 1920 was around 14 cents, but did not remember the minimum price. The witness refused to state the exact amount the company had in the bank at the time of the alleged breach of contract on the part of the growers, saying that enough money was available to meet all bills.

The original contracts between the growers and the Phez company were introduced into the records, with the exception of the one of E. S. Paxson, whose attorney has not arrived.

Just how soon the case will be completed is unknown due to congestion of the court docket at the present time because of the Hall-Olcott contest election suit. However, testimony will be heard tomorrow, though there has been some effort on the part of the defendants' attorneys to have the case postponed until September.

KATY EMPLOYEES DEMAND INCREASE

Denison, Tex., July 24.—Maintenance of way men on the Missouri Kansas and Texas railroad are virtually asking for a 33 percent increase in wages a destruction of the overtime rule, G. W. Pyles, general chairman of the maintenance of way brotherhood on the road announced here today.

After a conference in St. Louis with officials of the road it was decided to submit the two questions to the railroad labor board, Pyles said, and an immediate decision requested. There are about 6,000 maintenance of way men on the system.

SEATTLE TO BUILD $3,000,000 HOTEL

Seattle, Wash., July 24.—Approximately 6000 Seattle residents subscribed a total of $3,000,000 in bonds to finance the erection of a new hotel here, sponsored by the chamber of commerce as a community enterprise, was announced at noon today when the subscription campaign concluded.

The $3,000,000 was raised in five days. Originally it was planned to sell $2,700,000 in bonds in seven days, but the citizen's committee of salesmen met with such success that the drive was ended today. Construction of the hotel, which will be built on leased ground owned by the University of Washington, will begin within four months and the building will be completed in 18 months, according to present plans.

GOVERNMENT TO SHOW HABITS OF BIRDS BY FILMS

Washington, July 24.—Bird lovers who are also motion picture voters have a treat in store for them.

Two motion pictures dealing exclusively with birds have just been completed by the department of Agriculture and soon will make their appearance on the screen in "movie" houses throughout the country.

One of the Agriculture Department's pictures shows the "National Bird Refuges on the Gulf of Mexico." It starts with the reservation patrol boat, which takes the visitors from Pass Christian to the low-lying islands off the Louisiana coast.

At the outset attention is drawn to the federal regulations administered by the Biological Survey against disturbing the birds or their eggs in the national refuges. Pictures of the flocks in flight are then shown, together with nesting scenes of many of the interesting species of birds found in that locality. These include the pelican, the willet, laughing terns, old and young Louisiana herons and royal terns.

The other film, entitled "Anne's Agrette," shows interesting pictures of the American egrets, snowy herons and other birds on the Walker Lake Reservation in Arkansas. The picture is so arranged as to demonstrate the inhumanity of the traffic in the plumage of these birds for the purpose of personal adornment.

Anne shows her new hat to her husband, who notices the plume on it and explains that it is an egret—the nuptial plume of the egret. He tells her how these birds have been almost exterminated through the work of plume hunters. He then describes his visit to a federal bird refuge and the egret he saw there. The scenes shift to a great cypress swamp in Arkansas. After the explanation Anne decides she will not wear a plume.

The pictures are both short, one reel each, and will soon be distributed.

DATA SEIZED LOS ANGELES

Medford, was concluding a sentence in the Jackson county jail imposed upon him by the circuit court for having engaged in the new industry of bootlegging. When evening came, it is alleged, Burr was released from jail and two men passing by in an automobile, supposedly by chance, were called by the jailer and requested to haul Burr from Jacksonville, where the jail is located, into Medford.

They took Burr into their machine drove him up into the foot ranges of the Skiskiyou mountains where, some 15 or more miles from Medford they met 15 or 20 others seemingly by appointment.

Here, it is stated, a noose was put about the negro's neck and he was thrice strung up to the limb of a tree shots were fired into the ground about his feet and, finally, he was told to beat it and not return. He did, heading across the mountains for California.

A Second Instance. On March 17, J. T. Hale, a Medford man of some property, was taken from his home, escorted some miles out of town where he, too, was strung up by the neck for three or four times by a masked band. It was demanded of him, so it is related, that he abandon certain litigation he had instituted in the courts of the county, that he make admissions regarding certain other alleged acts, and that he leave Medford forthwith, "go as far as he could and never come back." Hale went, and that is the second chapter of the story.

Some two weeks later, Hank Johnson, a well known character of Jacksonville, was taken from that town by night, a rope was put about his neck and he was strung up and finally told to head for parts unknown.

Other things alleged to have been done by the night riders are to be laid before the grand jury, such, for instance, as threatening letters sent to Circuit Judge Callins warning him against granting a new trial to a bootlegger against whom a jury in the circuit court had returned a verdict of guilty.

How long it will take to spread all of these allegations before the grand jury is unknown, though it is believed that the greater part of the week will be required for their consideration. But in the meantime the people of Medford, and of Jackson county, are waiting with tense interest for the outcome of the investigation.
