Awaiting Instructions

In its editorial correspondence written by E. A. Koen, its publisher who is also official propagandist for the "Patriotic" societies, the Dallas Observer says concerning the coming election:

The big forthcoming happening is the formal issuance and circulation of the little yellow ticket of the Oregon Federation of Patriotic societies. No one seems able to predict what will be done by the societies, either as to the state, county or city. There are a number of men who claim to be certain that they will be endorsed, but their claims cannot be verified. Until formal announcement is made of the endorsements there is going to be much hustling about, wire pulling, etc., but in the end, it is admitted the delegates to the council will vote their convictions and the men named on the ticket will reap the reward in votes.

Of course this is pure propaganda, for the leaders of the federation have probably long ago made their selections, though they will give the delegates the privilege of ratifying them, just as they give the rank and file of the societies the privilege of voting as they are instructed on the yellow slips, but it shows the system employed by secret society autocracy in democratic America.

The members of the secret societies, who are without voice in the selection of candidates, are expected to vote blindly the ticket as selected for them by their bosses—which seems to be the first requirement of their boasted 100 percent Americanism—and it must be admitted they live up to expectations, induced to the appeal to intolerance. None of them know how they are to vote and so the issuance of the yellow ticket containing instructions, is anxiously awaited.

This is a fine commentary upon the intelligence and discrimination of our "patriots," who are voted in masses to fulfill the bargains made by their bosses behind closed doors and thereby establish invisible and irresponsible government for the benefit of secret hokums.

"What fools these mortals be!"

The Cost To Oregon

What will it cost Oregon to pass the so-called "Compulsory School" bill?

There are in Oregon 92 private and parochial schools with 12,031 pupils. The average cost of educating a pupil in the public schools of Oregon is $89.19 annually, which would make the cost of educating these 12,031 pupils now educated at private expense, $1,073,045 per year to the taxpayer.

The additional costs for school buildings to house these 12,031 pupils now educated without cost to taxpayers, based on the present average cost per pupil of $300, would be $3,609,300, which would also have to be met by increased taxation, as nearly all school buildings in the state are overcrowded.

So much for the cost in dollars and cents to the taxpayer, which is the least part of the cost to the state.

The Compulsory school bill will injure Oregon to an extent that cannot be computed in dollars and cents. It will stamp Oregon as the freak state of the union, the most intolerant commonwealth, the only one that denies the parent the inherent right to supervise the education of the child, that substitutes for the American system of individualism the German kaiser's system of collective education and the Soviet idea that the child is the property of the state.

The Compulsory school bill will serve notice to the world that Catholics, Lutherans, Adventists, Episcopalians and other churches that maintain schools of their own under state supervision, where children can be taught religion as well as the three R's, are not wanted in Oregon, and if they come, they must give up individual rights guaranteed in the constitution.

The Compulsory school bill will compel those residents of Oregon who desire religious education for their children or who desire to provide education at their own expense, either to send their children out of the state to more liberal commonwealths, or, which is more probable, to move out themselves.

The Compulsory school bill, if passed, will not only keep needed population from Oregon, but will drive present population out. It will retard development and paralyze progress and set back the state for many years.

Oregon has already suffered severely from the reputation secured through being an incubator of freak bills necessitating an incessant campaign to prevent confiscation of property and to preserve our form of government. It is this reputation that has contributed materially in retarding the state, and kept her lagging behind sister states.

To pass the Compulsory school bill will convince the nation that Oregon is an unsafe place either to invest or to live, a state where there is constant meddling by cranks and fanatics, not only with government and property, but also with individual liberty and freedom of conscience—the one state in the union that permits discrimination against religion.

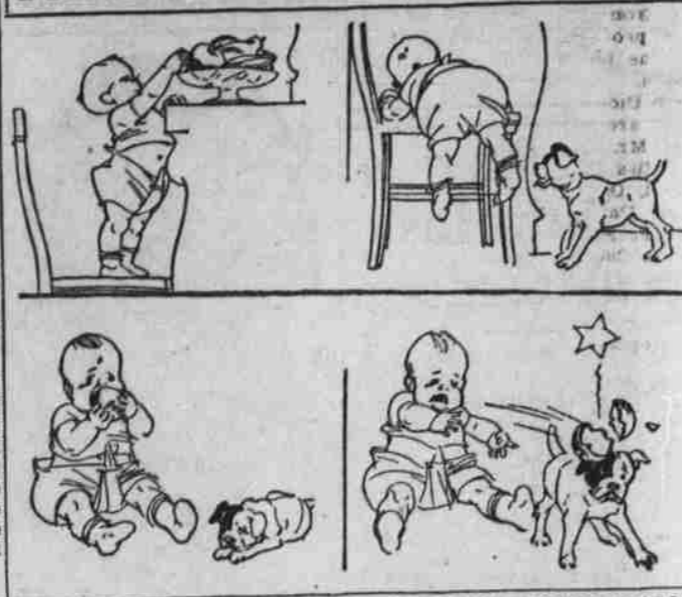

To pass the Compulsory school bill will effectually and irredeemably stamp Oregon as the fool in the family of states.

WHAT HAPPENED When Sheila Elliston Refused Love

By IDAH MCGLONE GIBSON

Key Calls on the Police

When John left me I smiled again as I thought of his changing the numbers on my car. His ready prevarication about being out on his own business with his employer's automobile told me that even my faithful John might once in a while be caught when concerned only upon his own affairs.

I knew, however, that I would have forgiven him even greater dereliction than he had unconsciously revealed to me, because of the way he had not only tried to save me, but Phil, from all annoyances.

However, I determined that from now on no one should try to save anyone else from any annoyances, no one's feelings, no one's reputation, no one's pride should be saved at the price of concealment.

My poor conventional people are always indulging in some primitive emotion and then squirming and turning "About face" to save our pride or to save our hitherto immaculate reputations.

In pursuance with the plan which I had formed the moment I found out from John that the man he had taken to the hospital was Walter Jones I called up and made an appointment with Doctor Thornton.

While I had been waiting for John I had sent out to the Shore House for Marie and she now arrived with clean linen and another street dress.

A hot bath and a rather careful toilet freshened my spirits quite as much as it rested my body and I found upon looking into my mirror that I did not seem much the worse for my night's loss of sleep.

By the time I had finished my butler had telephoned to all the places where Tony Soper might be found and had been told at each of them that he had not been seen there for many days.

I was also much disappointed to find that my friend, Mrs. Walton, had left the city again.

I made my way to the hospital where I found Doctor Thornton. I told him the whole story, leaving out nothing but even including my experience of the night before.

Doctor Thornton could not resist telling me that he had been afraid of some such complications and that is why he had advised Sheila not to marry.

He was surprised to know that Walter Jones was in the city and offered to go to the hospital and find out if there was any hope that he would again regain consciousness. He demurred, however, when I told him I was going immediately to the chief of police and ask him if possible to find Sheila and Tony Soper.

"You will be sure to bring all sorts of scandal about your ears, Mrs. Wilmington."

"I am past caring for that now," I asserted. "I think perhaps that all this awful trouble might have been averted had we not been so much afraid of the feelings of those we loved and the speech of our acquaintances and so-called friends."

Obituary

Frank August Carl Klampe was born in Prussia, Germany, February 27, 1845. On March 10, 1860, he with his parents came to America. After spending a few years in Wisconsin they moved to Dodge county, Minnesota, and while there was soundly converted and remained faithful to his Master.

On November 17, 1868, he was united in marriage to Caroline Loehke, who preceded him in death October 22, 1905.

In 1890 they moved to Osceola county, Iowa, and after living there 23 years they moved to Salem, Oregon, and resided there until September 27, 1906, when they moved to Jefferson, Oregon.

Two sisters are still living and one brother and two sisters preceded him in death.

The funeral services were held at the Evangelical church conducted by Rev. F. W. Launer of Salem, assisted by Rev. E. G. Hornsby of Jefferson and Rev. O. O. Epley of Sweet Home.
