SUICIDE'S BODY RECOVERED FROM SWIRLING EDDY

Mill City, Ore., Nov. 23.—After a search of two hours the body of John Yanak, of Tacoma, was recovered from the deep pool of the Santiam at Mill City into which he had plunged in his successful attempt to end his life, Wednesday.

C. M. Cline and Clarence Mason of Mill City, who had constructed a raft of logs for the search, found the body floating a few feet below the surface of the swirling eddy below the Southern Pacific bridge.

The man had told friends in Mill City that his family had asked him not to return to his home and this coupled with the fact that his physical condition had rendered him unfit for work, he believed to have caused him to take the fatal leap from the bridge.

Witnesses said that the man had evidently regained his desire to live after the cold waters had carried him out of reach and that he struggled desperately to pull himself to shore.

Yanak had come to Mill City from Camp No. 17 near Detroit, Oregon, and stopped at the Linn Hotel the previous night. The proprietor of the hotel said the man aroused suspicion when he took a double bottled axe to his room and men at the hotel hastened to interfere with him.
