The League Coming

The Non-Partisan League of North Dakota is the latest to claim credit for the election of Walter Pierce as governor and is trying to edge out the Ku Klux Klan and 100 percent patriots for official recognition, perhaps on the ground that to the victors belongs the spoils. At any rate the League views the governor-elect as a member and is planning to capture the legislature of 1925 to cooperate in enacting League legislation.

A. C. Townley, creator and boss of the League is scheduled to come to Oregon to help organize the state as its Senator-elect Lynn J. Frazier also of North Dakota, as well as other shining lights of the League, who will try to do for Oregon what they have done for North Dakota, where the program of state socialism is being given a try-out.

A circular sent out from the League's Oregon headquarters declares that Senator-elect Peter Zimmerman of Yamhill county is also a member of the League, giving them a representative in the state senate as well as a governor and concludes: "Mr. Pierce can do nothing with a legislature controlled by the state Chamber of Commerce. The producers must go to work now to perfect the League and elect the next legislature and then put a real constructive program up to Governor Pierce."

Although North Dakota farmers comprise 89 percent of the population of that state and farmers but 29 percent of Oregon's population, nevertheless Oregon offers the most tempting field of any of the states for the League. Its record for freak legislation ranks it along with North Dakota and the people of Oregon seem always ready to try anything once. We only need the League now to complete the work so auspiciously begun, at the last election, which affords us at least one cause for thanksgiving.

Advertising the Northwest

The Hill lines, comprising the Burlington, the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific announce a campaign of advertising designed to stimulate interest in and migration to the northwest. As the announcement states, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana and Wyoming are rich in undeveloped resources, in agricultural and mineral wealth, and the northwest assets are not appreciated by the country in general.

It is the belief of the northern railroads that the national development due to the inherent economic possibilities of the northwest can be hastened by consistent and well thought out publicity. It is believed that through such measures the northwest can be established in the national consciousness as a section holding out great appeal to any man who desires to improve his condition.

The story of the northwest will be told; its history, its development, its economic position, its economic possibilities. Films recently taken for motion picture use, are being developed to be supplemented by a campaign which involves the use of the largest national magazines and agricultural publications, extending over a period of years, commencing in the spring of 1923.

When the final disposition of the Central Pacific has been decided it is to be hoped that both the Southern Pacific and Union Pacific launch similar campaigns. These railroad campaigns, together with the advertising planned by the Portland Chamber of Commerce, should do much to focus attention upon this region attracting settlers and investors.

Along State Street

Trouble never dodges anyone who is looking for it.

Have you bought and installed your mail box yet? Help the men in gray!

A man who is not capable of looking out after himself, usually gets married.

The extravagance of the dear girls is shown by the careless way they use cosmetics.

Some men are born crooked, and others fill in the time between jobs by bootlegging.

We wonder if the ex-Kaiser is telling his grandchildren what he did in the World War?

A telephone girl always get your number by being polite to you when you are rude to her.

One of the most disappointing things in the world is for a person to refuse our advice, and then make good.

Many Congressional candidates spent nothing on their campaigns, and many of them got nothing out of them either.

Clothes may not make the man, but they go far to make government in Italy, where Fascisti ministers wear black shirts.

"The Shame of Oregon"

(From the Duluth, Minn., Herald.)

The voters of Oregon at last week's election adopted a constitutional amendment that on its face seems merely a harmless compulsory education law.

But the fact that the amendment requires that children shall be educated in public schools maintained by taxation, thus excluding parochial schools of whatever creed and private schools with or without creed, shows that this measure, which is similar to the one that Michigan voted down two years ago, is the ugly brat of bigotry and intolerance.

The pretense of those back of this measure is that they are moved by friendship to education and the American public school.

The fact is that it is simple bigotry and intolerance of the narrowest, cheapest, least intelligent type.

This is a shameful thing to happen in America, but it is a timely warning.

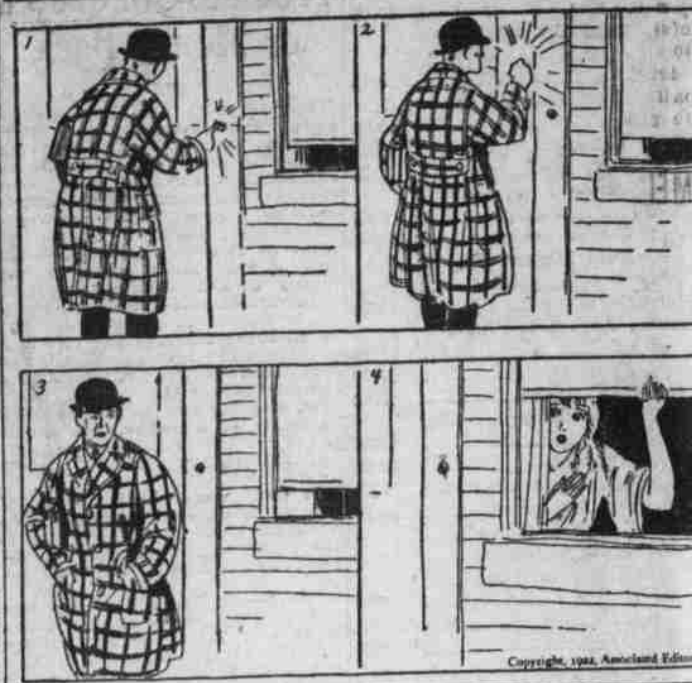

Forces of narrowness and prejudice and intolerance are at work in this country. The attempt that has succeeded in Oregon doubtless will be made in other states. If America is to remain what it has been, the home of bigness and charity and tolerance, the friends of America, whatever their creed or race, must be on guard to resist the poison counsel of the forces of prejudice and intolerance. It has been America's pride and boast that it has not discriminated against any man because of his race or religion. Catholics, Lutherans or those of any other creed have a right, if they choose, to educate their children in schools where moral training goes hand in hand with secular education, as it should. The state has a right to require that the education of every child shall be adequate, and to that end it doubtless would have a right to demand that private schools meet the educational standards of the state. There the state's right ceases.

America is not what it has claimed to be if religious freedom is to be driven out. The movement that has prevailed in Oregon has its rise in no right sense of patriotism and in no intelligent championship of education. It is the menacing child of bigotry and intolerance, and it will have the vigorous and vigilant opposition of every thinking American who prizes the liberties his forefathers bought with their blood.—Duluth Herald.

Nalda's Revenge

"Whist ye, young lady," spoke Officer Mulcahy brusquely to Nalda Courteney, "stand back there and don't try to push Mary Devlin."

"Somebody give me a pencil and paper and I'll take the names of all of you."

Kate, the maid, who had been near Mary stepped to a writing desk and put in Mary's hand, a pad of paper and a pencil.

"Now, Mary Devlin, my dear, take the lady's name and we'll probably give her the chance to say something, that she wants but at the proper place and time."

"Your full name please, miss."

"I'm not giving my name," refused Nalda Courteney as she saw her friends edging away and visions of herself in court came to her.

"Oh, yes, you will, dear lady, and so will all your friends. I'm not going to be hauled on the carpet by the chief for letting you get away if anything serious comes of this."

The little company was thoroughly sober by this time and thoroughly frightened. Out of the tail of his eye Officer Mulcahy saw this and he winked reassuringly to Mary.

By this time the crowd had all gathered around him.

"You know we didn't see anything, officer," pleaded one of the women. "Surely you will not hold us. We came in only after the whole thing was over."

"No one was here when I came in officer," added one of the men. "except Nalda Courteney and Malcolm Starmount. At that time Mr. Tennant was lying just where you found him."

"So her name is Nalda Courteney, is it. Write it down, Mary."

"Oh, I didn't see anything," exclaimed Nalda impulsively, fear permeated. "Dick Tennant was lying on the floor when I came in."

"Oh, you did not see anything," broke in Mary Devlin, quick to grasp the full import of the admission. "I thought you said a moment ago that if that man in there should die you would have something to say. Hadn't you better say it now?"

"Good for you Mary. I always knew you were a smart girl," observed Mulcahy as he systematically took the names of all those present, visitors and servants.

This done, Mulcahy allowed them to go, thoroughly cowed, with the admonition to "Keep a close tongue in your hands. Don't talk."

Nalda Courteney was the last to leave. She was determined to find out whether Tennant was really dead. Privately she was sure that he had been killed by the blow of the falling piece of statuary and while she did not care a particle as far as he was concerned, her mind was busy with a plan to fasten the crime of murder upon Starmount.

Mulcahy passed through the door soon after Nalda left.

He found Ted Parker and Starmount working over Tennant.

Mulcahy glanced at the injured man curiously. "I don't think I'd worry over him, so, I think he is done for," he said to Starmount.

"But, Pat," remonstrated Mary, "men don't get killed in such a way—just falling down on the floor"

GRANT JUNIORS ARE CHAMPIONS

By playing the Washington junior high school team to a scoreless tie last Friday afternoon on the Willamette field, the Grant junior high school eleven is the undisputed 1922 football champion of the junior high schools of the city. The Grant eleven played the Washington earlier in the season and won 7-0. They also defeated the McKinley squad 6-0 in their first game and to a scoreless tie in the second meeting.

The game last Friday afternoon was hard fought from start to finish, some very good team work was displayed by both sides. Several times each team was within striking distance of the goal but could not muster the punch at the right moment. Harold Richards, senior in Willamette who made his letter last year but who was kept out of the game this year on account of illness, coached the winners. Homer Hulsey is the Washington mentor. Cramer, Bearcat fullback, had charge of the McKinley squad.
