Clemenceau's Mission

Georges Clemenceau, aged war premier of France, is touring the United States, in behalf of France. His articles on the European situation are being widely printed, his lectures are being delivered to great audiences. He is making a popular appeal to enlist American sympathies and retain American friendship for France, and American intervention in Europe, and to accomplish his purpose is scolding Americans for running away from world problems.

Of the ability, force, courage and sincerity of M. Clemenceau there is no question. He is too old for personal ambitions. His elevation to the premiership at a critical hour undoubtedly saved France. But the Prussian terror has seared most of the charity out of his nature and he is unable to think of Germany save as the beast that perpetually endangers. Force has always ruled the Prussian and he believes that force only can avert the German menace. After what France has suffered at German hands, no one can blame Clemenceau or the French but it is questionable whether doubt and suspicion and dread can ever patch-up a permanent peace for shell-shocked Europe.

To charges of militarism and imperialism Clemenceau reminds us that the thin blue line of France was all that stood between the world and German conquest in 1914 and that if Germany had the power today, it would in all probability be all that could avert disaster until the world again made ready, so in this light, the more soldiers France has to protect herself, the better the protection for the world. Clemenceau tells us that having once interfered in European affairs and so changed the course of destiny, America can not now evade the consequences. Having played a part in war, the United States must help put the world in order by doing our part in peace. As long as we continue to play the slacker, just so long will the world drift from bad to worse as demoralization and collapse threaten a new dark age for civilization. And if it comes, the fault will be largely America's for failing to live up to the splendid promise she held out to a war-wrecked world, and which still lives in the hearts of humanity.

Clemenceau's message is to tell us that it is not too late to do our share, to wake America out of the moral lethargy that has benumbed our sense of responsibility, so that we may lead the old world out of the slough of despond. As the New York World puts it:

He comes, therefore, this ancient man who has seen so much evil and has passed beyond illusion, to reaffirm the greatest hope in the world. He who cared only for France, he who embodied the cynicism of a mature civilization about the naive idealism of a young one, that man, Clemenceau, has emerged out of retirement to say that the youth of the world was right. He has come to say that European civilization, weary and tangled in its own history, had reached the end of its own devices. * * * That, beneath the surface of his speech, is the dramatic meaning of Clemenceau's mission. That is what he wishes us to understand. That is all he need tell us know. For having said this much, the rest follows inevitably. A Nation whose name is bound up with the hopes of men cannot permanently refuse a call like this. * * * Here is the common ground in a distracted world. Here is the one standard to which all men can rally. Here is the test of America, the test of her vision and her fibre.

Our Besetting Sin

Farmers of Kansas and Oklahoma along with many other states this year elected governors pledged to reduce taxes and at the same time voted in Kansas to pay the ex-service men a bonus of $25,000,000 and in Oklahoma, a bonus of $50,000,000, a characteristic American procedure. The same story was repeated all over the United States. Taxes can not be reduced as long as the people continue to vote bond issues and sanction great expenditures. This situation brought forth some pertinent remarks from officials of the National Grange assembled at Wichita, Kansas, last week for the 56th annual convention.

"The American farmer must get into his economic cyclone cave, must retrench and quit borrowing money if he is ever to see the dawn of an era of prosperity comparatively free of debt," said Thomas C. Atkeson, legal representative at Washington, D. C. "Any national or state legislation which facilitates borrowing money for the farmer is highly detrimental to him. Agricultural ills can not be remedied by legislation, but the American farmer cannot be convinced of this, as was shown in the recent election. The spirit of Roman times when the people turn to the government asking them for assistance, forgetting that they are part of the government, in our besetting sin at present."

The administration's policy of loaning to farmers and stock-raisers only postpones the day of liquidation and the producer is not materially aided thereby. But the farmer has got it into his head, after listening to the song of the politician, that the government is the source of his prosperity and his adversity, rather than he himself, and that to remedy matters he must tinker with government, as he has been doing in North Dakota, with the result of making a bad matter worse.

The great trouble with Americans is that they will not pay the price for success—which is self-denial and rigid economy. The foreigner whether a boot-black or a dairy-hand, is here only a short time before he is in business for himself. They can all of them teach thrift to our native population, including the farmer. But it is easier to vote a change in government than it is to reform ourselves.

Along State Street

Never spend your money before you have it.

The man who refuses to argue is the hardest man to convince.

Time was made for slaves, but automobile repairers now use it to decorate charge slips.

Many a man wishes for the speedy return of summer when he doesn't have to watch his overcoat.

A pessimist is a man who keeps counterfeit money for fear that some one will pass it back to him.

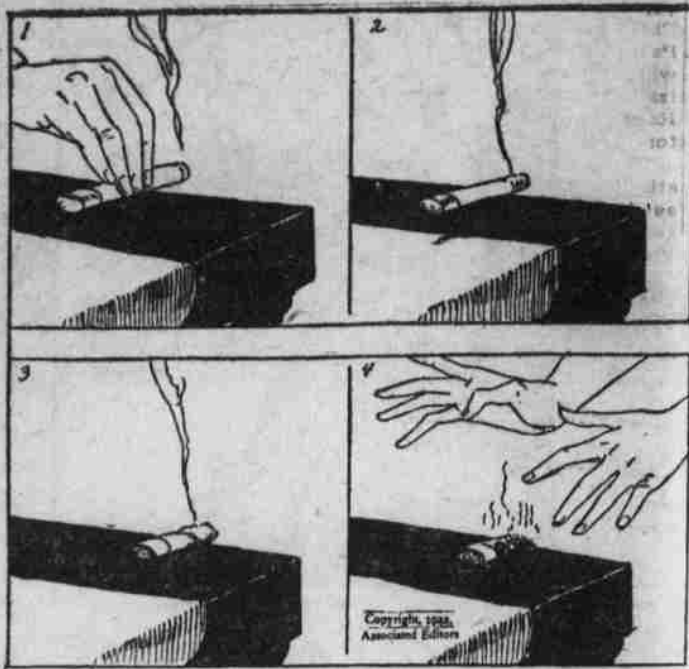

The long skirts have convinced us that the less we see of some girls the more we are going to respect them.

Normalcy is certainly on the way. They are now cutting only six wedges out of a pie. It used to be eight.

An optimist is one who believes his car actually does the mileage per gallon that the man who sold it to him said it would.

Possibly the reason the bootlegger is not ashamed of the business he is in is because he has no reason to feel ashamed of the people with whom he does business.

The Regeneration of Malcolm Starmount

By Idah McGlone-Gibson.

Laying the Plans

"Did you call, sir? Did you call, Mr. Starmount?"

"Yes, Sather. I wish you would ring the garage and tell James to bring the car around to the side door. I think Mr. Tennant is well enough to go home."

Sather said nothing, but he looked curiously at the still unconscious form of Tennant lying on the broad divan.

"I want you to bring this man home yourself, Sather. Dismiss James when he brings the car around to the windows at the side of the room over there and then come in and help us get him into the car."

"But, my Lord, the car will cut up the lawn. It will be better not to have any tracks of that kind. It was again Mary Devlin who thought of the important thing."

"Then you think that we had better take him out the front way?" Starmount asked in a voice that showed he was still excited. "Sather be sure that none of the servants are about except James and Kate."

"It's a good thing Tennant had dressed before he answered the lady's S. O. S. I would have hated to have gotten him out of that bathing suit and into his clothes."

"Here, Mary, take these bloody towels away and we'll prop him up a little for I would rather even Sather did not know how bad he is."

In a few moments Sather returned saying: "The car is at the front door. I dismissed James and I will drive your friend home myself."

"Good idea, Sather."

"Go back and get everything ready and we'll bring him to the car. You take his head, Mulcahy and Parker and I will take his feet."

"No, I know a better way than that," suggested Mary Devlin. "Cross your hands and make a chair like you did when you went to school. Mr. Parker and my Lord and you, Pat, lift the man on to it and put his arms around their necks. Now up altogether."

"Hold him there, Pat, from the back."

As Mulcahy lifted the man he whispered to Starmount: "He is dead this time for sure."

Starmount almost dropped the burden, but they managed to take Tennant through the hall to the car where, as they were propping him up on the front seat, Starmount said to Sather: "The man is dead. And you know Nalda Courtney will enough to know that she would fasten his death upon me if possible I have never called upon you to return that favor that I once did you."

Sather turned quickly. "You know I always told you I would be ready. What do you want me to do?"

"Do you think you could manage an automobile accident and smash up the car? You might jump first."

"Then you want to get rid of this Tennant entirely?"

"I want to make it seem, Sather, as though this man had died away from my house."

"Leave it to me. That will be easy."

Parker handed Sather a roll of bills. "If anything happens call on me," he said.

"I will, sir," and he drove away, with the limp head of Dicky Tennant bobbing on his shoulders and his arm bolstering him up on the seat.

The car had hardly left the grounds before another car swung in.

"Have you invited any more visitors, Mr. Starmount?" inquired Officer Mulcahy. "If you haven't that looks as though our friends who've just gone were sending someone back to investigate. I don't trust that Courtney woman, sir. I don't trust her."

The three men waited with different emotions as the taxi drove up the long driveway.

Inside the house, Mary Devlin, who had not followed the men as they took Tennant out, went back into her mother's room.

"Where is Eddie, Mary?" her mother asked.

"Here I am, Ma." On the luxurious carpet of the bedroom even his limping had made no sound. "And oh, Ma, I never thought this world could be so beautiful. I hope he will let us stay a long, long time. Do you think he will, Mary?"

"I don't like those folks that were here. They made an awful fuss."

"Say, Mary, was that man hurt when the door hit him?"

"How did you know about the door, Eddie?" Mary asked quickly.

"Why, I saw it all. I was just coming in the house and I saw him fall and try to catch himself and bring down the table and that iron thing that was on it. And I was just coming in when that woman came out of the door and made such a fuss."

"Did you see Mr. Starmount? What was he doing?"

"He didn't do anything but put his hand across so that the man couldn't go into the room."

"Mr. Starmount didn't strike the man, Eddie?"

"Oh, no. He only tried to pull him up after he had fallen and he picked up that iron thing."

Mary turned impulsively and hugged him. Then she put both hands on his shoulders and looked him straight in the face.

"Don't tell anyone what you have told me unless I should tell you to. But, Eddie, do not forget one solitary thing that you saw because sometime you may have to tell it and if you have forgotten, we will have to go back to our little old room, and my Lord will have to go to prison."

Tomorrow—Officer Mulcahy Re-signs.

PUT VALUE

the northwest, which includes Oregon and Washington.

In comparing the Salem pack of 1922 with the northwest pack of 1921, Mr. Allen figures as follows:

That in the pack of strawberries, Salem packed 83 per cent of the entire amount packed in the northwest, showing that Salem is really the strawberry center of this part of the country.

Loganberries Are Leaders. In the loganberry pack, Salem put up 60 per cent of the northwest output, and also 60 per cent of the pack of prunes, thus giving Salem the lead by far over any packing center in the northwest in prunes and loganberries.

On the same comparison, Salem packed 39 per cent of all Royal Anne cherries packed in the northwest and 38 per cent of all Bartlett pears. In blackberries, the per cent was 16. In other words Salem alone packed about one-sixth of all blackberries canned in the northwest.

The percentage of Salem comparison for the fiscal year were $324,719.95, an increase of more than $25,000 over the preceding year with a decrease in the administrative expenses and a net return to the state of more than $300,000.

Statistics Are Given. To give a definite idea as to the great fruit packing industry of the northwest, Mr. Allen compiled the following statistics, showing the fruit pack in the entire northwest for the year 1920 and for 1922, and is as follows:

	Cases	1920	1921
Apples	728,280	948,678
Black raspberries	17,592	8,671
Blackberries	375,796	519,039
Cherries	227,358	211,783
Loganberries	270,646	243,639
Pears	335,979	375,761
Red raspberries	130,439	94,031
Strawberries	39,428	71,546
Prunes	123,269	100,982

The grand total for the number of cases of fruit packed in the northwest in 1920 is 2,266,073 and for the year 1921, a total of 2,632,196.

REVISION OF

laws will be more effective and less needed," he declares.

Says Bootleggers Camouflage. The corporation code, he suggests, should contain "a provision to prevent, so far as possible, the formation of corporations for the purpose of carrying on gambling, bootlegging or other unlawful business under the guise of a religious, charitable or social club or association."

For the first time in the history of the corporation department the blue sky law is now self-sustaining the total fees for the past year exceeding the cost of operation by $2363.26 as against a net loss of $3726.79 in the operation of the blue sky department the previous year.

During the past year, Handley points out, his department has been instrumental in outlawing the common law trust company of syndicate and the so-called Three Per Cent Loan company, frustrating an attempt by radical interests of other states to gain control of Oregon's state banks, forcing the so-called Sargent plan of financial and stock manipulation out of the state, frustrating the repeated attempts of chain organizations to evade the corporation laws, and practically eliminated the foreign oil stock selling corporations from the state.

Sargent Plan Denounced. Commenting upon the Sargent plan of stock salesmanship known as the "one call system," Handley expresses his lack of confidence in the ability of the average stock salesman as a financial adviser by presenting figures to show that out of 876 salesmen quizzed by his department only 22 per cent had ever had any previous experience in financial promotion.

"There is a constant and considerable turn-over in these sales organizations and on the whole nomadic disposition and inclination to paint the lily with personal opinions and let the fundamentals of investment take care of themselves," he declares.

Handley also points to the fact that through the inauguration of a policy of close cooperation between his department and established certified accountants of this state, the investigation of foreign corporations requesting admission to this state or permission to sell stock in this state has been greatly expedited and the cost to the applicant greatly reduced.

Department Pays Well. The gross receipts of the department for the fiscal year were $324,719.95, an increase of more than $25,000 over the preceding year with a decrease in the administrative expenses and a net return to the state of more than $300,000.

During the year the department acted on 252 applications for permits under the blue sky law, permits being issued to 205 corporations. A total of 811 permits covering the sale of stock and securities aggregating $35,086,456 were in effect at the close of the year. A total of 1032 domestic corporations filed articles of incorporation during the year and 72 foreign corporations qualified to do business in the state making a total of 10,339 live domestic and 825 live foreign corporations of record June 30.
