Early American History Revealed By Indian Curios

New York, Dec. 12.—Every state in the union and all the Americans were represented Wednesday in the official opening of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, dedicated to the interpretation of the life of the aborigines of the western world.

Within the walls of this great institution, the collection of which already comprise nearly two million specimens, it was announced, the mystery of the origin of the red men may be revealed through intensive research. Nearly every state in the union has at least one case in the museum devoted to relics of the Indians who once dwelt within its borders. Tidbits which once inhabited Manhattan Island were especially at home in the upper part of New York city. A carefully prepared model represents the life which they led in the rock shelter which remain to this day. Diminutive figures, like marionettes, were posed before a representation of the ancient rendezvous realistically that the early history and traditions of the Manhattan seemed re-enacted.

By far the largest collection of sacred bundles in this country is deposited in the museum. Among the Indians tribes, when a boy found himself approaching manhood, he made his way to a wild and lonely place and prayed and fasted in the belief that some guardian spirit would make known to him a vision. The guardian spirit which, in his weakened condition, he imagined directed him, told him to prepare a group of objects, such as the skin of the hawk, which would make him fierce in attack, or a swallow's wing, to enable him to dodge. All these objects, which were supposed to give attributes to the young warrior, were gathered in a bundle and carried with him when he went into battle.

One of the richest portions of the collection represent life in the southwest, where Coronado sought the mystic Seven Cities of Cibola, which were said to be overflowing with gold and treasure. The dream of the conqueror was not realized, but there are in the museum many remarkable carvings and ceramics he visited. The visitors today saw many rare ornaments in gold form, various regions of the country, illustrative of aboriginal art. For purposes of study they would have done as well had they been wrought in copper, but since they are worth about $250,000, they are always in charge of special guards and are heavily insured.

Ms. A. J. Perry, Silverton, was among the out of town visitors today. J. W. Maruney, Salem gardner, will leave Salem tomorrow morning for Portland where he will spend a short time on business. One of the most beautiful examples of landscape gardening has just been completed for Phil Brownell at 588 north Winter St. by J. W. Maruney. 295

Blue and White Gingham With Pique and Ricrac

OWOMANS INSTITUTE Fashion Service

By MARY BROOKS PICKEN

WITH the demise of the servant girl and the necessity for the lady of the house to adorn her own kitchen, house dresses, now called home dresses, seem more in demand than ever before—that is, the distinctive, fresh, clean, launderable ones.

The fresh cleanness of a nurse's uniform is always pleasing to see, and so with a housewife. The kind of dress that she wears enhances the brilliancy of her china and the transparency of the crystal. Food tastes good when it has been prepared by one appropriately and becomingly dressed. The dress shown is of blue-and-white striped gingham, with pique trimming, and ricrac edging. As it is made in one-piece fashion, it is easy to iron. The belt is loose, fastening at the front panel lines. Almost any plain one-piece dress pattern may be used for this dress, provided the plaits are added in both front and back before the dress is cut. The front closing is made by the addition of an extra piece and is finished similar to the opening of a man's shirt. The collar is a lengthwise piece of material cut four inches wide and one inch longer than the neck measure.

Frederick C. Webster, who was named as one of the defendants in the mortgage foreclosure suit of the Ladd & Bush bank against the Phez Farms company has filed his answer, in which he alleges that while in total ignorance of the $20,000 foreclosure suit against the Phez Farms company, he has placed improvements valued at $400 on one of the Phez tracts he had purchased.

Mr. Webster alleges that on August 21, 1921, he paid as a first installment on tract 1, farm No. 1, the sum of $1000 and that at that time the tract was free of encumbrance. That at a late date he paid the Phez Farms company the whole $50,000 foreclosure mortgage proceedings.
