BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law.—Gal. 5:22, 23.

Ignoring Coolidge

President Coolidge's special plea for an immediate reduction of 25 percent in income taxes for 1923 due March 15, has evidently fallen upon deaf ears—at least there is sign of speedy action by Congress. Coming so late in the day, it was probably designed for political effect, to enhance the president's popularity.

The pending revenue bill, now before the senate committee, carries such a reduction, which was also recommended by Secretary Mellon, but there is no prospect of immediate action and only yesterday Mellon declared the bill as passed by the house, must be revised to prevent a huge deficiency, which means further delay.

With government revenues yielding a surplus, there is no excuse for refusal to grant taxpayers this needed relief and only peanut politics prevents compliance with the president's demands, politics for which politicians of both parties are responsible.

The president does not seem to have much influence with congress. His recommendations have been repeatedly either ignored or flouted and as yet no constructive legislation marks his administration. With a nominal republican majority in both houses, neither is functioning along lines advocated by Mr. Coolidge. The house is willing to pass most any measure supposed to be popular, such as the Muscle Shoals bill and the bonus bill and shirk responsibility upon the senate, which is also inclined to "pass the buck" to the president in the full knowledge that vetoes will weaken the president's popularity with certain "blocs"—but as long as it strengthens members in their own districts, they are perfectly willing to sacrifice either the nation or the party for their own re-election.

Monopolizing the Air

Suit has been brought by the American Telephone & Telegraph company, which owns most of the inventions which have perfected and popularized radio transmission and receiving appliances, to prevent infringements of patents by manufacturing and broadcasting concerns.

The craze for the radio has been stimulated by broadcasting stations maintained by companies selling receiving sets to provide purchasers an inducement for buying. There has been no charge for broadcasting entertainment up-to-date, but with the first enthusiasm over, and the novelty failing, as the sales of sets slows down, the broadcasting station will have to be placed upon a commercial basis to be maintained.

If the telephone company's suit is sustained, most of the concerns selling sets must retire from the field, unless arrangements are made with the owners of the patents being infringed. It will then devolve upon the latter to maintain the broadcasting stations, which it asserts it is willing to do, to protect patents and its control of transmission.

As the use of the radio is still in its infancy and as it may eventually, in its development, supplant both telegraph and telephone, the issue at stake is a vital one. A monopoly of the air would be disastrous and could not be tolerated, unless by the government.

Home Making Helps

In Honor of Ireland's Patron Saint

St. Patrick's Day gives the ambitious hostess an opportunity to entertain her friends with a variety of social functions. As the day does not fall among those designated as legal holidays, the affairs given are usually in the form of dinner-dances, dinner and theatre parties or luncheons followed by bridge or Ma-Jong.

While many people play the former, the latter game "of a thousand intelligences," as the originators call it, is still in its infancy socially speaking.

Ma-Jong is taught all over the country and once learned, it becomes quite a fascinating pastime. The sets run the gamut of prices from five dollars to those of three figures. An Irish Ma-Jong party may sound a bit odd, yet it may be made a beautiful event.

In the way of decorations, use white flowers and a lot of attractive greenery. Arrange small green covered tables for the players in a hollow square. The invitations should be written on rice-paper rolled and tied with green Chinese cords and tassels. In the invitations request that your guests come in Chinese costume. Two expert players should be at hand to guide the efforts of the uninitiated.

Call the game for two o'clock and serve tea and refreshments at 4:30. The refreshments should be Chinese. During the game, tea in handleless cups should be frequently circulated with tiny seaweed cakes or crackers.

The refreshments "proper" may take the form of a hot Chinese dish. Almond or pineapple chicken, might be served with water chestnuts in brown sauce and the inevitable rice instead of bread. Rice cakes and Chinese preserved fruits delicately speared with wood on toothpicks make a delicate dessert.

The refreshments should be served on trays at each table. Paper plates and large paper napkins are used. The guests should be given a choice of chopsticks or forks. The tea, after it is made, is strained into hot pots so that it remains the same through the entire serving. No lemon, cream or sugar is offered, so no teaspoons are used. This will carry out the idea of the Ma-Jong party perfectly and will, incidentally, be a very simple affair to prepare for. It will, however, be unusual enough to cause comment.

The chicken dish is not hard to make. The chicken is boiled and cut up. A rich brown gravy is made and blanched almonds are split and added to it with the seasoning. Finely-cut celery stalks and leaves are also added.

For the pineapple chicken, the pineapple—fresh if possible—is cut into small dice and added to the brown sauce, or a cream sauce. The addition of a few bamboo sprouts is good and these can be purchased in cans. Water-chestnuts, parsed and put into a sweet and sour sauce make a delicious relish. They need only a few minutes cooking in the sauce.

Flower-flavored tea should be used. It is a little more expensive than ordinary tea, but so little is needed, that it does not really figure seriously in the cost of the party and it does add to its originality.

For a dinner-dance, only as many guests need be invited to the dinner as the hostess wishes, for it is entirely proper to invite others for the evening only. The same green and white decorations may be used in this case also. Irish music and one or more Irish dances should be made a part of the evening's entertainment to give the affair the sentiment of the day.

The hostess may serve a real Irish dinner. She should lay her table with great simplicity. A white Irish linen cloth may be used and a centerpiece of an Irish fisherboat with a red sail may be laden with marzepan fish for bonbons. It may sail on a sea of looking glass surrounded by a bank of Blarney stones and shamrocks.

Little pots of shamrocks may be used for place-cards. The foods chosen may be colored here and there to heighten the decorative feature of the service, and a whorl of fern leaves under each service plate will be an appropriate decoration.

SEEK TO CIRCLE WORLD WITH MARCONI MESSAGE

New York, March 13.—Nine radio stations in Great Britain, each using a different wave length, will begin broadcasting at 6 o'clock tonight (eastern standard time) an address by William Marconi which it is hoped will be heard around the world. Arrangements have been made with listeners with special receiving sets in California and in Shanghai, China, to see if they are able to hear the address. If they are successful, radio will have covered the world.

"Thou Shalt Have No Other Gods Before Me"

By Idah McGlone Gibson

Zoe looked at the two men who were in the car with her. George Manton had loved only one woman (and she was unworthy) all his life, and he had felt it deeply that at last she had come back to die in his arms.

Zoe could not conceive that Ted Overton could have done a thing like that. Mr. Price had told her that Ted was attracted by many women. He was an artist. Was it not possible that he loved woman's beauty more than any one woman?

Her reflections were interrupted by hearing Mabel say:

"I do not think Mr. Price ever forgave me because when Mr. Wiltsey was testifying at the trial I asserted I did not believe his testimony."

"But he was under oath," interrupted Zoe.

"I know it," answered Mabel, "but I also know Charley Wiltsey well enough to know that the words, 'I do,' which he spoke in answer to "You promise to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help me God?' meant nothing to him. He was as used to taking the name of his God in vain as he was when he thought it necessary."

"You are very bitter against him, Miss Utterworth," spoke George Manton.

"I presume I am, because he not only shattered my faith in man, but aliented two people who up to that time I had thought my best friends Both Mr. Price and Miss Torrant were never the same to me after that trial. Mr. Wiltsey acted very brusquely to Miss Torrant afterward and in some way, although I was not at all to blame, in fact had known nothing about their quarrel, she attributed some of it to me."

"Don't you think it was because you felt so keenly on the subject, that you thought they were finding more fault with you, Miss Utterworth?" said Ted. "Oftimes the very sentiveness of the innocent person makes for a breach in friendship which hurts both of his friends alike."

"Well, you see I always thought Wiltsey took that money. At the time Charles was playing the market heavily. He was afraid that his deals would become public and that as the president of a bank it would ruin him. Indeed, some of his deals were carried on in the name of Mr. Price. At the time Bev—" (Mabel caught herself and quickly used the phrase "Mr. Price") "was very much worried for fear this would come out.

"You remember, Mr. Manton, that day when everything went down till the bottom dropped out, and there was almost a panic in the city. I was in Mr. Price's private office when evidently Charles Wiltsey telephoned. I heard Mr. Price say, 'I have to do this, Charley, because if things should go wrong with you, it would evidently ruin me.'

"Evidently Mr. Wiltsey told him he wanted the money only for 20 hours, for Mr. Price answered, 'Well, I will hypothecate some of my securities and let you have $200,000 within a couple of hours. But I shall be on needles and pins until I get it back, Charley, honestly I shall. I don't believe in this stock gambling, you know.'

"Mr. Price then rang off and turned to me looking very much annoyed about something. Afterwards I decided it was because I was there, although he made no reference to the conversation either then or afterward.

"That night was the opening of the Follies. The four of us were to have dinner and go on to the theatre. Mr. Wiltsey did not come to dinner, and all through it Mr. Price did not speak more than two or three words. Both Miss Torrant and I knew something was wrong. We thought perhaps there had been a quarrel between Mr. Price and Mr. Wiltsey.

"It was not until the second act of the Follies that Mr. Wiltsey joined us, and I heard him whisper to Mr. Price as he passed:

"'It's all right. I've got the money. I'll let you have it first thing in the morning.'

"After that we had a hilarious time. Both men seemed to be in the highest spirits, and after the theatre Mr. Price invited the whole Follies company over to the restaurant for supper and we had a very gay time.

"Naturally when the trial came I remembered that that was the night in which Mr. Wiltsey testified that he had been to the golf club and then gone home to dinner, and young Hunter had testified on the contrary, that he had given Wiltsey $250,000 for that amount of Acme Advertising securities and placed them in the safe before he left."

"Did you tell this to any one?" asked Manton, "before or during the trial?"

"Naturally I did not. At that time Mr. Price was my employer, and I owed all my loyalty to him. I could understand perfectly that Mr. Price had nothing to do with any crookedness, and I didn't want him to get into any trouble by reciting the transaction of the bor rowing of the money, which I had inadvertently overheard. I understood perfectly that if I should do so it would be almost impossible not to bring Mr. Price's name into the trial in a very nasty way, although I knew he was innocent and that what he had done was to lend to his friend only for 24 hours a large sum of money."

"Do you expect that Mr. Price asked Mr. Wiltsey where he got the money?" asked Ted.

"No, I do not."

DISCONTENTED WEE CROAKER GREEN FROG

There was not a happier family in the old mill-pond than Croaker Green Frog's family, until one day a red bird flew across the water and settled to rest on a log on the bank.

Wee Croaker Green Frog spied him and swam to the surface of the water to admire his beautiful, bright red suit.

"My," he croaked to his sisters, "I would love to own a bright red suit like that. Isn't it perfectly lovely?"

"Pretty, yes," laughed one of his happy sisters, "but, gracious, it's too brilliant for a frog. If we dressed like that they'd call us red frogs instead of green frogs. No, I don't believe we'd like red suits." And away the sisters scooted under the rocks to take their afternoon nap.

Wee Croaker Green Frog sat watching the bright red bird until it spread its pretty wings and sailed away into the blue sky.

"I can't see for the life of me why I can't have a bright suit like that," he sighed to himself, "It certainly would look lovely sailing around under the waters in the summer light. I'd be the envy of the whole pool. Furthermore, I'm going to have one—you just wait and see."

"What's that you're going to have?" asked his daddy, who happened to be passing just then. "What are you wishing for now? Of all our children, you're the only discontented one. I'm afraid if you don't change your ways, you surely will come to harm. What do you want now?"

"A bright red suit like Mr. Red Bird's," replied Wee Croaker Green Frog. "I'm tired of this dull old suit of mine. I can't see why we have to dress in such dull colors. Why can't Mama Croaker Green Frog dress us in red?"

"There, there, wee one," said Daddy Croaker Green Frog, so sorry for his youngest that he could not scold him. "I used to think that, myself. But when I grew older, my grandmother told me one day, and now I'll tell you."

Daddy Croaker Green Frog sat down on the log next to his son. "Do you see these dark ridges that run down my back?" he asked. "Well, they are supposed to imitate the plant stems that grow in our pond. My green coat shades right in with the leaves that line our home. My silver vest looks like the glimmer of the water.

"Look at my feet, brown with markings resembling the moist earth on which I hop. The yellow markings on my suit might easily be mistaken for the centers of the pond blossoms. "Why, as long as I'm quiet, no one can see me because my clothes protect me. The same is true of all of you youngsters. Your mother wouldn't dress you any other way than just as you are. It would be dangerous."

Just then a shadow passed over them. Daddy Croaker Green Frog caught hold of Wee Croaker Green Frog and into the water they jumped just as Mr. Kingfisher swooped down.

They hid among the leaves until Mr. Kingfisher, thinking he had made a mistake, sailed away.

That was the last time Wee Croaker Green Frog ever wished for a red suit.

YOUR HEALTH

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.,

United States Senator from New York—Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

Be On Watch For Measles At This Season of the Year

Many diseases seem to select favorite seasons for making their appearance, even when the weather has nothing to do with the case.

For instance, it is a happy school which goes through a year without an outbreak of measles some time during the late winter or early spring. Maybe there will be only two or three cases, and maybe there will be an epidemic of this plague of childhood.

Of course, the best way to keep a child from having the measles is to keep him away from children who have the disease. But when once a case of measles has appeared and been recognized in a school the chances are that every child in the school, if the school is a small one, or every child in the class, if the school is a big one, has already been exposed to the contagion.

Suppose your child had been playing with another child who has developed measles—what are you going to do about it?

Don't get excited. Measles are very seldom serious in healthy children. But the disease should be closely watched to prevent any after effects.

Keep a close eye on the child for two weeks after exposure to the disease. The period of incubation is from seven to fourteen days. If the child develops a cold with a slight fever, a croupy cough, sore throat, or swollen tonsils, put him to bed at once and send for the doctor.

Do not wait for the appearance of the rash to separate him from other children. This does not come until about the end of the fourth day of illness. Then the fever begins to go down.

The eruption can usually be seen first, if you will look for it, on the roof of the mouth. There will be two or three distinct little inflamed pimples, or "papules." Some hours after it will spread to the neck, the face, the forehead, and the body. A well-marked case can be recognized at a glance. The face is flushed, the eyes red, and the cheeks covered with groups, or crops, of pimples. By the fifth or sixth day the eruption begins to fade and the "desquamation," or peeling process, begins. By the seventh or eighth day the eruption is nearly gone, leaving a bluish look over the body.

The disease always runs its course. Great care should be taken, however, to prevent complications.

The patient must be kept in a darkened, well-ventilated room. The temperature should be kept uniform, at about 70 degrees. While the fever lasts, the diet should be limited to milk, bread and light soups. As the peeling period is about ended a more generous diet may be allowed.

The eyes, ears, nose and throat are affected while the fever lasts, so that they must be closely watched.

In an average case the patient should stay in bed for a week after the fever has entirely ceased.

Your doctor will prescribe suitable medication to meet the symptoms.

Answers to Health Questions

MRS. L. L. M. Q—When one has a severe cold and cough, but wishes to drink a lot of water between meals, is it better to drink hot or cold water, especially before retiring?

A—I would advise you to drink cold water without ice.

C. C. JR. Q—Is it harmful to eat lettuce with olive oil? Is this fattening?

A—Lettuce is very helpful and not fattening, but olive oil is fattening.

MRS. H. C. Q—My face feels dry and drawn up after washing. What can I do to remedy this condition?

2—What can I do to increase the growth of my eyebrows?

A—Apply cold cream to the face after washing it. This will improve the condition you mention. The soap you use is too strongly alkaline.

2—To increase the growth of your eyebrows I would advise you to apply a one per cent yellow oxide of mercury ointment.

Don't Let That Cold Turn Into "Flu"

Rub on Good Old Musterole

That cold may turn into "Flu," Grippe or, even worse, Pneumonia, unless you take care of it at once.

Rub good old Musterole on the congested parts and see how quickly it brings relief.

Colds are merely congestion. Musterole, made from pure oil of mustard, camphor, menthol and other simple ingredients, is a counter-irritant which stimulates circulation and helps break up the cold.

As effective as the messy old mustard plaster, does the work without blister.

Just rub it on with your finger-tips. You will feel a warm tingle as it enters the pores, then a cooling sensation that brings welcome relief.

To Mothers: Musterole is now made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole. 35c and 65c, in jars and tubes.

The money was part of a registered mail shipment of $5000 sent by the Pullman bank to the Spokane & Eastern here. When the package arrived it contained but $3500. Investigation failed to disclose the missing money or to learn how the package had been tampered with.

The money was returned in a registered package addressed to the cashier of the Pullman bank and included a note saying "thanks for the loan."

Idaho Schools Compete

Moscow, Idaho, March 13.—Eight high school basketball teams, section champions, will meet here Friday and Saturday at the invitation of the University of Idaho to play for the state title.

Teams from the southern part of the state are Rupert, Challis, Boise, Malad and Rigaby. From the northern part of the state come Kooskia, Kellogg and Moscow.

BAKER OPENS CAMPAIGN

"My purpose in the campaign is not to make any statement or any promise that I do not believe can be fulfilled or accomplished," said Mr. Baker. "Idle promises for the purpose of obtaining votes is one of the curses of our present political system and the candidate who deliberately makes promises he knows he cannot fulfill or who makes statements that do not coincide with his attitude and his actions in the past, should be eliminated before he starts. And the man who fails to fulfill his pledges to the public after election should be recalled. Idle promises or insincere statements are the most abominable sort of hypocricy.

"The foundation of my platform is to be the upbuilding of Oregon. I believe in Oregon and I know Oregon and I can see the possibilities, and I can see the past neglect. With the United States senator from Oregon rests a great deal as far as state development is concerned. I shall contend and shall endeavor to prove during the course of this campaign that Oregon has not received what has been due Oregon from the federal government, due to the fact that Oregon has not fought for herself at the proper time and in the proper manner.

Not Getting Our Share.

"I shall contend that while Idaho and California and Washington and other sister states have been forging ahead obtaining concessions and benefits from the government — benefits these states have been entitled to, mind you—Oregon has not received her share. As a result our development has been neglected and our growth slow.

"Out in eastern Oregon stand hundreds of thousands of acres of what we now have to call waste land. We have billions of feet of timber, hundreds of thousands of acres of fertile land and thousands more acres of land that can be put under cultivation; water enough to irrigate millions of acres of land; potential water power as great as a dozen eastern manufacturing states combined; many harbors capable of handling the greatest of ships. We have these assets but they are of no use to us unless we can make a market and interest the government or private capital in development and can impart to the world the fact that these assets exist and are available.

Sudden Activity Puzzles.

"At the present moment we are on the eve of an election and we note considerable activity in Washington. We note a flurry of effort to obtain for Oregon and for Oregon people, one or two of the things that Oregon deserves. Why all the flurry now? Why not a year ago, or two years ago, or three year ago? Did Senator Borah from Idaho wait until just before election to go after and obtain for Idaho the great irrigation projects there?

"Did senators from California wait until just before election to obtain the protective tariffs that have protected California products? Did they wait until just before election to have cyanide placed on the free list to help the citrus growers of California? Did they wait to present the measure which is about to be passed by congress erecting a dam in the Colorado river to protect southern California from flood and to irrigate two million acres of land?

Pre-election Work Disgusts.

"No, these men and Senator Jones of Washington and Senator Smoot of Utah have obtained these concessions by untiring efforts and by eternal vigilance the day after election as well as the day before. That is why our neighbor states at this time have veteran hospitals for their wounded soldiers. That is why Oregon now must send its men to one of the several hospitals in Washington. We are now about to lose the one rented hospital we have.

"Personally I have no patience with the official who waits until just before election time to stir himself into activity in behalf of the people and the state he represents.

Development Needed

"I have traversed the state from one end to the other and I have seen the shameless neglect of development and I have studied the causes. People do not know Oregon and the possibilities and they will never know them until we ourselves part with the secret which we have been keeping.

"It is time for a state-wide development movement and a movement to concentrate all the forces of the Pacific coast in a great program of coast development. I firmly believe that if all Pacific coast states will get together and present a campaign to the government we can bring about a development such as the entire Pacific coast has never before experienced.

"Since 1914 the United States government has dumped into Europe a total of something like twenty billion dollars. We may get a trifle of this back and again we may not. If we have owed an obligation to Europe we have most surely paid that obligation and we should call a halt.

"Suppose now the government should drop this European assistance idea—forget the capitalists who are holding the bonds of shaky nations—and put five hundred million dollars—one-fourtieth of the amount loaned to Europe, into aid and development of the Pacific coast. Can you imagine what that would mean to this country? Can you imagine what that would mean to the eleven great irrigation projects in the west which are starving to death because our government is too poor?

Cites Uses for Money

"If we can throw billions to Europe to help keep in power, governments that are inherently rotten can we not put a few millions into helping perpetuate our own prosperity and safety and welfare? Can we not help some of our irrigation projects, our farmers, our harbor developments? Can we not grant a few dollars for subsidy of Pacific coast ships to bring the United States the greatest trade ever known? Can we not erect a few hospitals for the disabled and crippled men who fought our late war? Is it more important that we keep Europe than we keep our promises made to the soldiers before the war when we were inducing them to go over and fight our nation's battles? Assistance of Pacific coast shipping would be one of the greatest benefits Oregon could receive. It would mean new markets for our products, for Oregon is at the door of the great markets of the Orient.

For Law Enforcement.

"If elected I shall continue to be an advocate of law enforcement. I am in favor of prohibition and in favor of rigid enforcement. My term as mayor of Portland has, I believe, demonstrated this fact very conclusively.

"Also, let me remind you that my program of law enforcement has not merely been spurted as a pre-election policy. It has covered a period of the seven years that I have had an opportunity to enforce law.

"On the subject of immigration I stand for enactment of law to exclude all future immigration until such time as the foreigners now in this country shall have been assimilated and Americanized. Unrestricted immigration is a menace.

Pleads for Veterans

"On the question of our national policy in respect to service men, I believe the neglect of disabled veterans has been criminal and that immediate steps should be taken to correct this condition. The men who became disabled in the service of their country should have the immediate attention and relief they are entitled to. The men responsible for such happenings as that recently when a young ex-soldier died through lack of care the day before he was finally granted permission to enter a veterans' hospital should be ousted from office and their places taken by men who have a heart.

"Furthermore I stand in favor of an equitable adjustment of the compensation of all ex-service men who served during the war. There was no lack of sincerity in our promises to these men as we waved them farewell at the depot as they left for war and there should be no less interest now after they have their work regardless of sacrifice."

This Prescription For Kidneys

No Drugs—Just Roots and Herbs

New Discovery Bleaches Dark Teeth Instantly!

A new safe treatment has been discovered which dissolves teeth stains instantly, giving dull, dingy teeth a charming new whiteness and lustre. This new treatment is called the Bleachodent Combination. It consists of a safe mild liquid and a new kind of paste. The liquid instantly curdles or softens the stains, while the paste removes them and if used daily prevents the formation of future stains. You just brush your teeth with a few drops of the liquid, then use the paste, and before your very eyes your teeth acquire a clear, flashing whiteness that even ten times the scouring by old fashioned methods could not give them.

It is vitally important that only a safe, mild preparation like Bleachodent Combination be used on children's teeth, which are especially subject to stains and decay. Bleachodent Combination is safe and harmless, for its mild ingredients are especially combined to act only on surface stains. It does not affect the enamel in any way.
