BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits: who redeemeth thy life from destruction: who crowneth thee with loving kindness and tender mercies.—Psalm 103:1, 4.

The Daily Daugherty

Daily the senate investigation committee unearths more scandal in connection with Attorney General Daugherty's conduct of the Department of Justice, much of it hearsay gossip; some of it unsubstantiated charges, but with a sprinkling of damaging facts that multiply suspicions. And daily, also, the attorney general issues a statement completely exonerating himself and proclaiming a vindication.

The trail of Daugherty and his right bower Burns runs in and out of the telegrams placed before the oil probes and prove their activity in the Teapot Dome investigation, not in behalf of the government but in the effort to shield the man who confessed he lied to shield Fall. As far as helping the senate get the facts, they did what they could to prevent it. This alone should force Daugherty's removal as unfit because unclean.

As to Daugherty's complicity in the various grafts described by the former wife of his late partner, who committed suicide in his apartments, and confirmed in some degree by other witnesses, judgment must be withheld for further evidence. There is no question of the graft that was tolerated under the Daugherty regime, but there is a question as to whether or not Daugherty profited by it as alleged.

The various stock transactions alleged were made, the fight films shown without prosecutions, wholesale whiskey withdrawals permitted on fraudulent orders and protection for law violators peddled at a profit for someone, either with or without the attorney general's knowledge. In either case he should be disqualified.

Meanwhile we will continue to enjoy the daily Daugherty expose and the daily Daugherty defense, our daily Daugherty, coming as regularly as the radio's daily dozen, and which if not as healthful are certainly more entertaining.

The Bonus Bill

In the amended form that it passed the house, there will be less objection to the soldiers bonus bill, which provides for paid-up 20-year endowment life insurance policies and cash payments to veterans entitled to not more than $50 in adjusted service credit, than to the measure vetoed by President Harding, which provided cash payments.

The adjusted service credit is figured on the same basis as in the old bill, $1 a day for home service and $1.25 a day for overseas duty, the first sixty days of service not counting.

The senate is expected to amend the bill which entails an approximate cost of from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 spread over 50 years, with a maximum cost of $175,000,000 in any one year, but to retain the endowment policy feature which replaces cash payments, vocational training and farm or home aid.

A paid up insurance policy is a much better asset to the ex-service man than a few dollars cash would be, that would in most cases, be spent as received. Moreover it would not embarrass the treasury to finance it, as the payments would be distributed over many years.

GUNBOAT SAILS TO WAGE WAR ON MEXICAN REBELS

New Orleans, La., March 21.—The Mexican gunboat Bravo steamed for Mexico early today to start sea warfare that is expected to drive the rebels from their port strongholds.

The vessel will attempt to reduce the three peninsula states, Yucatan, Campeche and Tabasco, the latter the present headquarters of the rebel chieftain, Adolfo De La Huerta.

This is the key port to the territory from which help is shipped. The rebel government has obtained many millions of dollars in export revenue since occupying this port.

According to Mexican Consul General Arturo Malias, there are only 490 rebel troops in the state of Yucatan and the force of marines on board the Bravo will be able to subdue the rebel garrison.

The Bravo carried 125 marines and a large cargo of ammunition for its guns. As many small arms and ammunition as the could carry was loaded on it.

Fargo, N. D., March 21.—North Dakota's 13 votes in the republican national Cleveland convention will be cast for President Coolidge.

This was definitely assured today with only a few scattering returns remaining to be tabulated from Tuesday's presidential preference endorsement primary in North Dakota.

Corrected figures from 1829 precincts out of 3055 in the state gave Coolidge 47,865 votes; Senator Robert M. LaFollette of Wisconsin 34,008, and Hiram Johnson of California 20,187. Remaining precincts to be heard from are not expected to materially change the figures.

PLANS PROCEED FOR CARPENTIER GIBBONS BATTLE

Chicago, March 21.—Plans proposed for a 10-round bent between Tommy Gibbons, St. Paul, and Georges Carpentier, France, heavyweights, with Jack Dempsey, world's heavyweight champion, financially interested on July 4, at Michigan City, Ind., despite the statement of Governor Warren T. McCray of Indiana, that "there will be no prize fight in the state while I am governor."

Floyd Fitzsimmons, Denton Harbor, Mich., promoter, who says he had assurance from Dempsey of financial support, has deposited $5000 with a bank here for Carpentier's expenses. Another $10,000 will be put up by him in a few days. According to the promoter, Carpentier will sail for America, May 1.

Eddie Kane, manager of Gibbons; Jack Curley, representing Carpentier, and Fitzsimmons will meet here Tuesday when articles will be signed and forfeits posted. The promoter expects no interference from Indiana state authorities since neither fighter is a champion and no title is at stake. The Indian law permits boxing exhibitions.

Fitzsimmons here yesterday said he hoped to make enough money out of the match to clear all claims on his open air arena in Michigan City.

Teheran, Persia, March 21.—The question of establishment of a republic in Persia, discussion of which has been made the order of business in the parliament today led to disorders in and about parliament house yesterday.

Anti-republican groups forced their way into the parliament chamber despite armed resistance of the police, pulled down flags and flagpoles and then set on advocates of the republican cause, plying their fists vigorously. Order was eventually restored by police reinforcements.

Telegrams are pouring in from many parts of the country demanding the overthrow of the shah absent in Paris.

"Thou Shalt Have No Other Gods Before Me"

By Idah McGlone Gibbons

THE GAGE OF BATTLE
Price walked up and down the room impatiently.

"So you won't take that trip around the world, you say?" he asked Mabel.
"Why should I," she asked. "In fact, why should you want me to now? George Manton has the fact in his possession that you lent the money to Wilsey."

"All right," he said, with a gesture as though he had dismissed the entire matter from his mind. "You will probably be called to the stand if Manton proves this matter. Before he is finished with you, you'll probably have to tell the world just what your relations with me have been."

"My relations with you? Are they any different than your relations with me?"
"Well, the world looks upon them differently. If those relations become public, my magazine will not suffer. I will not suffer. But you probably will not be able to get another story in a reputable magazine."

"I don't believe it, Beverly Price." "Yes, that's true. Think back for a moment; you will recollect a very famous writer who until recently was welcome to the pages of almost any popular magazine. Then a scandal came out about her—have you seen any of her stories since?"

"No, but that will not deter me. From now on, Beverly Price, I'm going to be honest with myself. I thought it was a great thing to love you; I thought it was a great thing to give all for all. Somehow I thought my love would excuse all. I felt it was different. I thought that you loved me as I loved you. I thought I was the man; and I can never tell you the agony that was mine when I found that I was only a woman."

"Then it's going to be a battle between us, is it, Mabel?" "I don't know whether you would call it a battle. I have told Manton the truth, and I intend to stand by it under any circumstances."

"You're a brave woman, Mabel, even if a mistaken one."
"You tell me that you were rather curious about Zoe Middleton. What will you do when she passes you without recognizing you?" Price glared at the woman.

"I shall probably be able to bear it," she said. "I've borne more terrible things. I've lived through the fact that you, whom I trusted, were a crook. After that I can live through anything. There's no need, Beverly, of prolonging this conversation. Everything between you and me is finished. I am determined to take my medicine. I don't believe you can escape from taking yours, this time at least."

There was a knock at the door; Price's secretary entered.
"There's a newspaper man in the outer office who asks for an interview with you."

"Tell him I have nothing to say." "He told me to ask you if you knew that Clarion was writing a review of the whole embelment case, as a follow-up story to the outside."

"I have no interest in anything of that kind. Tell him I have nothing to say."
Mabel Utterworth started toward the door.

"One moment Miss Utterworth," requested Price. "The reporter, Mabel, will not see you come in," interrupted the secretary, "and asked if you would see him for a moment."

"Tell the reporter he was mistaken. Miss Utterworth isn't here," commanded Price.
"No, Beverly, will have no more lies," said Mabel. "The man knows I'm here. Say to the reporter that Miss Utterworth has nothing to say."

As the secretary closed the door, Price came toward Mabel his face all smiles.
"Did you mean that to, that you have nothing to say?"
"I have nothing to say to him," said Mabel coldly, "and now, goodbye."

"Are you living at the same old place? I may want to call you."
"Yes, I'm there, Beverly. You know it's an extremely respectable place; if all these things that you have threatened me with come out, they probably won't let me stay there much longer."

Again the secretary's light knock; the handle of the door was turned.
"Miss Middleton has just phoned, Mr. Price. She wants to know if you will see her immediately."
"I will see her in 15 minutes. Where is she now?"
"I think she's at the office of The Clarion."
"What's that?"
"Yes, I remember, interrupted

Mabel Utterworth softly. "Miss Middleton told me she was going to look over the reports as to embelment this morning."
"Has the reporter gone?" asked Mabel of the secretary.
"Yes, Miss Utterworth. He left immediately."
"Then I shall say goodbye," she said, turning to Price.
Beverly came forward offering his hand reluctantly. Mabel bowed and left the room.

Tomorrow—The Unfinished Story

Good Night Stories
Illustrated by Hans Balthus

BETTY CHANGES HER MIND ABOUT SOME THINGS
"Oh, dear!" Betty grumbled when her mama interrupted her from her play to ask her to bring a bucket of water. "I just hate to carry water. I don't see why folks can't..."

"Some folks are never satisfied," laughed a merry woman. And Gocombeck, the wee travel elfin, hopped up beside Betty.
"Oh, Gocombeck!" Betty could not help but smile, at the sight of her old friend. "I do hate to have to carry water from that old hydrant."

"Gracious!" exclaimed the elfin. "You might have cause to complain, if you lived in some other country."
"Wait just a second, Gocombeck until I fill this pail for Mother. I'll be with you very soon." Betty hurriedly filled the bucket and handed it into the kitchen to her mother. Then she ran back to the office side.

Before she had a chance to ask and question, he caught hold of her hand and away they sailed through the air over mountains and seas to Egypt.
"Why did we come here?" Betty asked. "Is this the place you were speaking of? Of course it is! Look at the women carrying bags of water on their heads! Well, I think I'd rather..."

"Just wait a second," laughed the elfin. "I didn't bring you over here to see them. However, I think I'd rather turn the faucet on and get a bucketful of water than have to dip it up from the river. But here's the thing I wanted you to see."
He pointed to a queer place. On either side of the river stood a mud bank across which ran a beam. On this beam was a pole with a bucket and weight at either end.

Just then, an Egyptian came up and pushed one end down into the river. The bucket filled with water and the weight on the other end of the pole helped him draw the bucketful of water up again. The peasant took his bucket of water and went on his way.
"Dear me!" Betty exclaimed. Like a puff of smoke, the whole thing vanished and she stood once more in her own yard.

"My, how far behind the times those poor people are. I don't believe I'll ever complain again about having to carry water when all I have to do is to turn the faucet on. Before you can say Jack Robinson my bucket is full."
Betty went on with her play. But the next time her mama called her to get a bucket of water, Betty thought of the poor peasant. And humming to herself, she trotted off to the hydrant, happy to think she lived in good old North America.

ter and sugar or a little maple syrup. This special bread used to be considered a Sunday morning treat as it takes a little time to prepare. Sometimes, enough dough was taken for a pan of raised biscuits, which raised in the pan to double their size in half an hour and were baked for breakfast.

The following tried and true recipes may suggest new ways of doing old things.
English Cream Scones
Sift a half pound of flour into a bowl with a tablespoonful of salt, three ounces of fresh butter and a teaspoonful of baking powder. When these ingredients are well mixed, add a gill of milk and a half gill of heavy cream. Roll the dough on a floured board to a quarter inch thickness, cut it with a small cutter, place it on a buttered baking-tin and bake it fifteen minutes then brush over the scones with a little sweetened milk and bake them five minutes longer.

Answered Biscuits
Mix four eggs with one and a half pounds of powdered sugar. Stir the mixture fifteen minutes, then add a pound and a half of sifted flour and mix all well. Work in a tablespoonful of soft butter. Roll the dough thin and cut it into small cakes. Butter an iron baking-sheet and lay the cakes on it. Sprinkle them with a tablespoonful of anise seed and let the biscuits stand and dry over-night. The next morning, bake them in a moderate oven and serve them hot for breakfast.

Cornmeal Griddle Cakes
Put into a mixing bowl, a cupful each of cornmeal and flour. Add three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, two level teaspoonfuls of salt and a teaspoonful of sugar. Beat three eggs, add them to a pint of milk then beat them into the dry mixture. When all the ingredients are blended, pour them into a pitcher. Have the griddle hot and greased and cook the pancakes as usual. This quantity should make about three dozen cakes. Serve plenty of good butter and maple syrup with the cakes.
