DENNIS URGES ADOPTION OF FLORIDA PLAN

Established by experience let us as loyal citizens who desire to see the state advance, turn to the other extreme and make Oregon exceptionally attractive, not only to the settler to whom we must look for further development of our agricultural lands, but also to the people who have money to establish manufacturing enterprises and other industries.

Would Attract Capital

"Already we have several eastern people possessing property interests in the state upon which they pay taxes. With income and inheritance taxes entirely eliminated we will claim these men as permanent residents, for the most part, and they will bring enough wealth into the state which can rightfully be taxed as property, to more than offset the amount now received by the state from inheritance tax.

"The argument that it will attract the idle rich may be partially true, but, suppose it does. Observation teaches and has proved that men with wealth do not stay idle, except in rare instances, and even then their wealth does not remain idle for long. Shortly after locating in Oregon some inexpensive, they say. Here in Oregon this fixed expense must be met as in other states and the way to lessen the burden is to attract more people with wealth and property to assist in paying this established fixed expense.

"With our splendid road system nearing completion which transforms the greatest portion of the state into a highly improved park; with cities and towns of the state brightened up for the tourists, why not go a step farther and make it an inviting place for the wealthy people to come and locate permanently among us. This will soon react most favorably upon the farming section. Property will be come active and begin to change ownership, and it is my prediction that Oregon will soon be better off from a taxation point of view than we are today, besides achieving a prosperity in business and industry the like of which has never before been witnessed in the entire northwest."

The resolution introduced by Senator Dennis reads:

RESOLVED by the senate of the state of Oregon, the house of representatives jointly concurring, that Article IX of the consti-
