MEMORIAL TO DAVENPORT TO BE COMPLETED

Silverton, Or., Jan. 26.—(Special.)—Ray King, the New York journalist who some time ago became the unmarked and grass grown grave of the once world famous Homer Davenport, will in a short time no longer have cause for complaint nor reason to "weep bitter tears at his neglected memory at Silverton." For, after three years of endeavor, often times discouraging, the Davenport memorial fund committee has secured funds sufficient to mark the last resting place of Homer Calvin Davenport, the cartoonist.

H. V. McClain will, through the Schaner marble works of Portland, place a monument, measuring 3 feet by 3 feet 6 inches at the base and 5 feet tall, on the grave. The monument will likely be placed this week. The marble stone is a beautiful piece of work. On one side is the simple inscription "Homer Calvin Davenport, 1857-1912." On the other side is an engraved copy of one of Davenport's own drawings, "The Journey Across," made at the time of the death of his father. It depicts his father in a chariot drawn by winged steeds.

The honor of securing the funds for the monument goes to the untiring efforts of the committee of which Dr. C. W. Keene is chairman, Julius C. Wolfe, secretary, and J. W. Hyatt, treasurer, and to the publicity committee composed of John Hobbitt, E. B. Kotteck and George Custer.

As the monument will be placed on the grave in the Silverton cemetery no dedication services have been planned.

PUZZLE NUTS NOT IN ASYLUM

Those who have quit working crossword puzzles because of the now fake that five people are in the insane asylum here, driven there by the crossword craze, may go back to their puzzles and finish them up because the story is branded as absolute fiction, made up out of whole cloth and printed in the face of denial by state hospital officials.

Dr. John Evans, assistant physician at the asylum, stated a reporter called him up and asked him what there was to the rumor that there were five people recently committed to the institution because of the crossword puzzle craze. Dr. Evans states he informed the reporter the rumor was a lie. The reporter then insisted that the crossword puzzles must be a great disturber to the patients there, which Dr. Evans denied. The reporter then turned his attention to Dr. Griffith, acting head of the institution, who made the same answer as Evans. Regardless of this the story was printed anyway.

BLAIR ALLEGES WOMAN DRUNK INJURED HERSELF

Henry B. Blair, defendant to the $2000 damage suit of Clara F. Fee, who asks that as bail for a Christmas day hearing he be allowed to have given her in her own home, seven miles northeast of Salem, came back in an answer yesterday in which he explained the circumstances of the Christmas party from his viewpoint.

Blair declares that the plaintiff, Clara Fee, came to the home of his foster father, W. H. Calver, on Christmas day in a drunken condition, having moonshine in her possession, he avers, which she stated she got out of her own still at her place of residence.

He says that after the Christmas dinner her husband, who was with her, took her home and she went to Portland. After her husband left, says Blair, Mrs. Fee attempted to return to the Calver home and was so drunk that she fell by the roadside sometime about 9 o'clock and injured herself. He says that Oscar Christensen was called by the woman's son, George Fee Jr., to take her home, which he did. Shortly afterwards Christensen came to the Calver home, states Blair, to get the woman's daughter, Beatrice, and take her home. Blair says he went to the Fee home to protect the children against the drunken frenzy of the mother and that he found her so drunk her face injured and had blood on it and she complained that her head hurt her.

Then developed some talk about $10 she alleged Blair owed and in the argument Mrs. Fee says, advanced on his brandishing a stove poker, threatening to use it on him. When she started to attack him with the poker, he says, he pushed her over into a corner and left. He says she followed him for about half a mile after he left her home. He wants the complaint dismissed.
