

HOUSE DELAYS ACTION ON PROHI REPORT

LONERGAN RAPS ENFORCEMENT UNDER GOVERNOR

Final action on the recommendations of the two factions of the legislature's special committee named to investigate the state prohibition director's department probably will not be taken until the North bill calling for abolition of the office and another scheduled to be introduced in the senate are acted upon.

Representative Loneragan, a member of the faction of the committee recommending abolition of the office of state prohibition director, vehemently denounced the activities of the department in an address to prevail on the house to adopt his report. He scored the system of operation, the alleged waste of state funds, the attempt to "get something on various candidates for offices, Senator McNary, Dr. Linville and others in office."

Representative Harburt, representing the other faction of the committee which recommended continuation of the department but with a new director, attacked Loneragan's argument.

"Mr. Cleaver's officers caught Loneragan bringing a bottle of brandy out of a place," declared Harburt. "He declared it was for his wife, who was ill."

Loneragan explained that the sheriff and district attorney of the state were on record against the continuance of the department.

"They condemned the state prohibition director and his department as interfering with law enforcement," he declared. "I am thoroughly satisfied that the trouble is not with the director himself, but with the department, the governor and Herwig dictated."

"What reason is there for an anti-saloon league in Oregon where there has not been a saloon for nine years? There was no authority for Cleaver turning over $1500 to Herwig. It never brought in one thing—not one conviction. Almost the entire amount was spent in debauchery in houses of prostitution of Portland and Astoria, and in one instance actually for immoral purposes. I am opposed to voting state funds for such purposes."

"Herwig's collections included $5000 for individuals and $1500 from the state prohibition department. It was admitted in the investigation that some of this was spent in riotousness. There are some who can see only one law and can't see the necessity of enforcement of others. Murder, rape, larceny are just as important as the prohibition law."

"During two years of operation, it has not been so much the activity of the department to enforce the law as to getting officials into trouble and trying to defeat candidates for election. Everything George Cleaver did was inspired by Governor Pierce and Herwig. What if we do have another director—what will keep the next two years from being the same as the last two?"

Loneragan went on to explain that "Tillie from Tillamook" was sent to try to obtain a bottle of liquor from Dr. Linville, federal prohibition officer at Portland. He named Senator McNary as another whom the state prohibition department had tried "to get."

SAY HOOVER TRYING TO RUN AGRICULTURE

Washington, Feb. 16.—Appearing before the house agricultural committee today, George N. Peek, president of the American Council of Agriculture, entered a protest over what he termed the domination of American agriculture by Secretary Hoover of the commerce department.

The recommendations of the president's agricultural conference, the witness said, contained nothing which had not already been formulated by Mr. Hoover and he quoted Mr. Hoover as having said the function of the department of agriculture should end with farm production and preparation. Transportation and marketing, he declared, were held by Mr. Hoover to be the functions of his department.

TO REFER THE QUESTION TO THE PEOPLE, WITH SENATORS EDDY AND GARLAND LEADING THE FIGHT AGAINST BOTH RATIFICATION AND SUBMISSION.

Eddy, given the time of nine other senators, spoke on the bill for nearly half an hour.

Senator Eddy, attacking both the bill and the resolution, asserted that to refer the question to the people would be a sidestepping of duty by the legislature, and he branded as absurd the idea of referring it to the people since failure of the amendment before the legislatures of the United States was already assured. He also severely criticized congress for proposing such an amendment, declaring it had entered into a game of passing the buck. The amendment itself he attacked on grounds that it was too sweeping in its provisions to receive serious consideration. Enough senators gave Eddy their time that he had 30 minutes to speak instead of the five allowed under a senate rule.

HARDSHIP ON FARMERS

Eddy emphasized the hardship which the amendment would work on the farms. He admitted that one element of people behind the bill was philanthropic and humane in its intentions, and had in mind the welfare of the child, particularly the poor children or those of worthless parents. However, he accused the American Federation of Labor with being behind the measure for selfish reasons, mainly to remove the

COMPETITION OF YOUNG PERSONS IN LABOR.

"The federation of labor," said Eddy, "would say to the youth of the land: 'You shall not earn your livelihood.' The amendment is a stroke at the American home, for it breaks up the family and shifts the burden of responsibility upon the widowed mother. It ruins character, for there is no more useful element in the education of any boy or girl than to learn to work, to learn industry and thrift. The time would come when the farmer couldn't have the help of his 17-year-old son in raising his crop without a permit from the federal government. Eighty-seven out of 100 boys do not finish high school, and this amendment would drive them into idleness and crime."

CONGRESS PASSING BUCK

Eddy termed the action of congress in submitting the amendment as an absurd, childish, weak-kneed, jelly-fish shouldering of responsibility on the states. He asserted that the Russian soviet is behind the move and that it would create all over the land a discontent that would be dangerous to government.

"I take my stand," said Eddy, "for the constitution. I take my stand for the American home. I take my stand for the welfare and happiness of the boys and girls, our future citizens."

Senator Zimmerman, who introduced the resolution, and the senate's main exponent for the amendment, opposed the bill to refer it to the people, but said he would not be afraid to refer it were it not for the "tremendous power of the press. If we could get the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth before the people I would not be afraid."

NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH BEFORE THE PEOPLE I WOULD NOT BE AFRAID.

Zimmerman cited what he termed the deplorable condition of boys and girls as he had seen them in the south, some of whom, he said, could neither read nor write. These, he said, must go out to become a liability upon the government. He cited Roosevelt and the late Senator Lodge as having endorsed such an amendment and declared that every political party in the last eight years had endorsed similar legislation.

"The only question," he said, "is state's rights against children's rights, and I am for the rights of the children."

Senator Banks was for reference to the people. He said he had not quite made up his mind he should vote on the amendment but that he had hundreds of communications from his constituents urging him to support it, and he considered his first duty was to his constituents.
