

HUBBARD BERRY POOL PRICES GENERALLY GOOD

DAIRY MARKETS STEADY; BUTTER UP HALF A CENT

Portland, Mar. 5.—Local dairy markets show a generally steady tone for the Thursday trade. Supplies are now well balanced with the requirements of local jobbers and the future trend of values will depend largely on the action of outside markets.

In the butter market a half cent advance in cube firsts to 40 1/2 cents is the only change for the day. Shortage of good butter is not so acute and a lower trend in the south will prevent any further advance here for the time being. King receipts are coming in liberal out storage and shipping requirements are absorbing all offerings and the market remains steady. A cent advance in firsts to 31 cents is the only change on the local board.

The hay market is exceptionally slow for this time of year with local demand almost negligible. Offerings are liberal, especially from valley points. Prices are slightly lower; buying price f. o. b. track Portland alfalfa $18.50 to $19.00; eastern Oregon timothy $22 to $24 with call largely for No. 1 stock; valley timothy $20 to $22; clover $16; oat and vetch $18.50 to $19; cheat $16 to $16.50; straw $5.50 a ton.

Country dressed meats and poultry are unchanged. Receipts were fair today with moderate demand. No large hop sales have been reported this week and so far the market has maintained a quiet tone with few growers willing to sell under 17 cents and few buyers willing to go over 16 cents. Coast hops are quoted at 24 cents for 1924 crop in the New York market.

Produce supplies are generally sufficient for local requirements. Lettuce prices are approaching a prohibitive level and this is curtailing the demand.

No improvement is shown in the onion market although there is less than 50 cars of good common cal stock left, according to carload dealers. Top prices are around $2.75 for fancy Sherwood stock but plenty of onions being bought around $2.50. Selling prices hold around $2.25 and $2.50.

Best grade Oregon potatoes can be bought at $1.50 to $1.60. Burbanks sell around $2 wholesale with some of the houses quoting as high as $2.25.

PRICE CUTTING PREVENTS SALE

Robert C. Paulus reports that he has just sold 2250 boxes of prunes and another deal of 2500 boxes neared consumation yesterday, but may be killed owing to a drastic advance price.

Word has reached here that both Red Ribbon and Northland brands of 40s are being offered in New York at 8 1/2 when the prevailing price is 8 1/2. The Red Ribbon is Mason Sherman's brand and Northland Eberhard's. It is not definitely known whether these are being offered by original packers, or some that are being sold from other hands.

It is reported that Mason Sherman has offered Red Ribbon as low as eight cents to other packers and this may be taken. It is understood they have about five cars of 40s left for this deal.

LOGANBERRIES BRING 5 CENTS ETTERSBERG 7 3-4

Prices paid to the Hubbard berry pool by the Ray Maling company of Hillsboro recently have been learned here and are of considerable interest for their bearing on the probable prices to be received by growers. The Ray Maling company secured the pool in competition against practically every Salem canner. The pool has about 200 tons of berries and is an important factor in valley berry production.

Prices paid for the pool this year, according to information gathered here, were as follows: Loganberries, 5 cents a pound, Red raspberries, 8 cents a pound, Blackcap, 7 1/2 cents a pound, Ettersberg strawberries, 7 3/4 cents a pound.

Soft strawberries, 6 cents a pound. Sour cherries, 5 cents a pound. The price paid for Ettersberg is a fraction under what has been the reported going price earlier in the season.

Many loganberry growers believe that there will be a better price than 5 cents paid for logans this year. They are looking for 6 cents and possibly 7 cents. They base this on the general condition of the fruit market, a good clean-up on most canner lines and also on crop conditions. However, some growers say they believe cents will be the price and are willing to take it. They point to the fact that the crop this year probably will be as large as the crop last year and recall that last year considerable effort was required to get the loganberries from the vines into canners. Meetings were held, canners appealed and for a time it appeared, regardless of the short crop, that many loganberries would rot upon the vines.

There may be, however, more logans dried this year than last. Last year an extremely heavy load of dried logans, all of which is not yet cleaned up, caused drying of berries to virtually stop and a very slight tonnage of logans was dried last year.

It is known that there probably will be some demand for dried berries this year, but to what extent that demand will crop in remains to be seen. If the season is very heavy it may assist in forcing up logans another cent. The most probable price for this year from the present outlook, seems to be 5 cents a pound with a possibility of 6 cents.

GRAPE VINE PLANTED IN 1859 STILL BEARS

Earl Percy yesterday discovered the oldest grape vine in the Willamette valley at the Wolfers place near Hubbard. The vine was set out by Hubbard, founder of the Hubbard township, in 1859 and its main trunk has grown to nearly a foot and a half in diameter. While the grapes grown on the vine are of the Concord type the exact name of them is not known, it being some variety no longer grown in any quantity. The vine is still a prolific bearer and yields a vast amount of grapes each year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS LISTENS TO WOMAN

London.—Ellen Wilkinson, Labor's sole woman representative in the House of Commons, made her maiden speech in that house recently. Dressed in black, which set off her auburn hair, she spoke vividly and earnestly, and made a good impression. The little lass, as she is called by her constituents because of her diminutive size, is expected to speak often on subjects affecting the welfare of women.

GROWERS URGED TO ORGANIZE TO PROTECT SELVES

"Growers and packers are notifying growers that a growers' organization will be unnecessary this year on account of higher prices being realized for fruits both canned and dried," was a statement made today by W. F. Drager, prune buyer.

"The fruit season is coming and the growers still are unorganized and have no voice in what they shall say as to what they receive for their product.

"It was my view to organize they no doubt will face the same difficulties they have in the past by canners or packers rejecting their fruit if the market happens to sag."

"Most loganberry growers know from past experience that when canneries desire to buy berries at less than the contract price all that is necessary for them to do is to dock the growers alleging their fruit is either too green or too ripe. The grower is compelled to accept the verdict."

"Under organization it would be possible for growers who make a contract, in case of rejection, to have such cases arbitrated and receive a square deal."

VALLEY CELERY WINS ON QUALITY

"A man named Lyons was up here from California last week visiting the Lake Labish and Troutdale sections to find out why we were getting a dollar more for celery in the eastern markets than the California growers," stated Roy Hurst, field man for Demsey & Company who was in Salem today.

"He found out. The reason is that they can't make 1.0 grade with the celery in California that we do here, and the stuff is worth a dollar more. Lyons raised 1100 acres of celery himself in California."

Hurst reports that excellent progress is being made with the Ben Hur sign on black cherries all through the valley.

Salem will be the big shipping point," he stated. "The other day we shipped up the McMinville Co-op which means virtually that we have 100 per cent control over there. We also will go strong in Newberg, Springfield and Portland. In fact we are highly pleased to be in the group we are getting all over the valley."

"If weather conditions only pan out it should be a big shipping year for black cherries."

DISREGARD OF OLD CUSTOMS IS RESENTED

publican, Maine, who took upon himself all blame for the vice president's failure to return to the chamber yesterday after he had witnessed the inauguration of President Coolidge.

Crowded galleries and an unusual number of senators, attracted by the prospect of a row, watched the proceedings in an atmosphere so tense that the quiet was oppressive. At the end there was a universal sigh of relief that the impact had been no worse but senators, gathering in little knots to talk it over, after the recess was taken, seemed certain there was more to come.

The vice president himself looked on during the session with an inscrutable countenance and declined to comment on it afterwards. Wearing a natty brown business suit, he had stepped to his place on the dais just at noon, had called the senate to order with a single tap of the gavel and then, glancing aside without a prayer, then he waited calmly for the fire works to begin.

They began at once. The clerk started to read the journal of yesterday's proceedings and Senator Curtis, the republican leader, asked, as is customary, that the reading be dispensed with. Senators Reed and Hale demanded recognition.

"The senator from Maine," said Mr. Dawes, "Senator Hale said certain criticism of the vice president had appeared in the morning newspapers because he had not returned to the senate chamber yesterday at the conclusion of the inaugural ceremonies."

"I think I can explain the reason he did not," said Senator Hale, "and I think it is my duty to do so."

"After the president had finished speaking the President and Mrs. Coolidge and the Vice President and Mrs. Dawes went down the steps to the waiting automobiles. The president started off and the vice president then turned to me and said 'I must return to the senate in order to preside over that body; how do I go there?' I replied that he was not to return to the senate but was to go to the reviewing stand in front of the white house to review the parade. This was due to a misunderstanding on my part and if any blame attaches it must rest upon me."

Senator Reed at once demanded that the journal be read but Senator Curtis wanted to go committee to notify the president to go to the reviewing stand in the Missouri finally agreed to an armistice until 2 o'clock.

But Senator Ashurst then demanded attention to explain that he had been misrepresented in this morning's newspapers as casting certain strictures on Mr. Dawes for his attack on the senate rules. He added that he had not criticized Mr. Dawes on that score but that he had objected to the "unseemly and untidy interruption" by the vice president of the ceremony of swearing in new senators.

The tally passed without reply and then the senate went through the motions of appointing a committee to wait on the president and took a recess while Senator Reed walked over to the secretary's desk and examined the journal of yesterday for himself while the vice president stepped down from the dais to the republican side of the chamber to shake hands with Senator Cummins of Iowa and became the center of an informal reception.
