Corvallis high school is slated to play Eugene high for the right to represent its district at the state tournament in Salem next week as a result of Corvallis' win over the University high of Eugene on the Willamette floor last night. The final count stood 19 to 15. The team from Eugene drew ahead at the start of each half, but both times was successfully headed by the Corvallis aggregation. Long wild shots and numerous fouls characterized the match. Out of innumerable attempts the University high players made a few baskets from untidy angles and distances. A handful of spectators saw the game.

 Machinery at the pumping station of the Salem Water company, which supplies Salem with its water supply, was re-installed today, after being taken out at the first of the year, when the high water began. The machinery is used for the purpose of pumping water to the top of the 15 foot gravel filter through which the water is run. In flood periods no pumping is necessary, the river itself flowing over the top of the filter. Actual pumping into the city water system continued day and night, any surplus being allowed to run into the reservoir at near Lincoln and Rock streets in South Salem, and any shortage causing the water to flow out of the reservoir. At present the city is using approximately two million gallons of water a day, less than a third of the amount used in summer.

DAUGHTER SAYS PORTER DEEDED PROPERTY TO HER

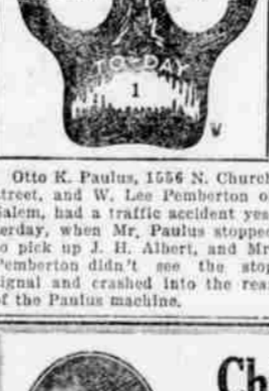

An answer filed in circuit court by Cora B. Snell to a complaint brought against her by her brothers and sisters, all children of Lorenzo Dow Porter, in which she declares her father had willed her all of her property in Marion county in consideration of her caring for him at her Portland home during the declining years of his life, has added interest to a case which has caused wide comment particularly among attorneys.
 Lorenzo Dow Porter, aged resident of Marion county, will know here, died at the age of 93. William Porter, Leonard W. Porter, May Laab, Frank Porter, Laura Lock, Ernest Porter, Ruth Harman, Mabel Kingsley and John Porter, all heirs of the estate, in their complaint that before Porter's death he deeded his property to Cora B. Snell, his daughter, as a trustee, to hold the same in trust for them and make distribution of the property to them after his death. They aver that they demanded an accounting and division of the property from her, but she refused to make either.
 The principal piece of property in the estate is valuable realty located on Bellevue street in this city. In addition it is alleged there was personal property including liberty bonds and war savings stamps.
 In her answer Mrs. Snell alleges that a number of months before his death her father came to her home in Portland and an agreement was entered into between them that she would care for him the rest of his natural life, and in return for such care he deeded to her all of his property, real and personal. She denies there was any trusteeship created.

AIR SERVICE POST FILLED BY COOLIDGE

General Mitchell, as chief executor of the independent air force theory of national defense, as disclosed by himself during the recent congressional investigation to be out of harmony with war department and administration policy on nearly all matters affecting the air service.
 During his testimony he sharply criticized both the war and navy departments with relation to air service matters, and Secretary Weeks and his advisers have taken the position he could hardly be useful in his present position, where he would be required to operate under policies which he had openly and emphatically challenged.
 General Mitchell was at Langley field, Va., to witness the anti-aircraft gun demonstration with the announcement of his successor was made, but his office gave out a statement prepared by him before his departure.
 "The question of my re-appointment as assistant chief of the air service," he said, "is a small matter. The question of the re-organization of our system of national defense is a very big matter. The people must decide what our national defense should be and to arrive at a conclusion they must know all the facts of the case and how it should be handled."

COMMUNITY EGO IS HELD NEEDED

"The upbuilding of a community is largely the upbuilding of a community ego. A city or town is just as great as it believes itself to be," said C. B. McCullough, president of the Salem Kiwanis club, in an address before the Salem Lions club at the Masonic hotel this noon. If a psychological condition, a belief in the community, can be built up the individual citizens as regards the advancement of the community will take care of themselves, was the belief expressed by Mr. McCullough.
 "Some will say that ego is an objectionable quality," he stated. "Sometimes it is. And yet the men, the groups of men, who have marked the milestones of the world's progress have been men who had a highly developed ego." McCullough's belief was that the outstanding need of the city of Salem at the present time is to develop a belief in the possibilities of the city.

SUIT TO COLLECT FROM BLACK AND WEST IS QUASHED

Medford, Mar. 6.—The motion to quash service of summons in the damage suit of the Hartman syndicate, Inc., of Ashland, against Oswald West, former governor of Oregon, and George Black, members of Governor Pierce's stock sale investigating committee, was granted in a decision filed Thursday evening by Circuit Judge C. M. Thomas of Jackson county and the syndicate is granted the usual ten days for further legal action.
 The Hartman syndicate sued for $200,000 damages and $50,000 special damages, against each of the defendants, on the grounds that the report of the committee, relative to their operations was damaging to "their good name, reputation and business."
 The motion of the defense was granted on the grounds that service of summons in a civil action must be made in the county in which the suit is filed, and that the "pretended service" of the summons in the action, made by the sheriff of Multnomah county, is null.
 A memorandum filed December 3 by the defense, the attention of the court is called to an opinion handed down by the state supreme court, in 1859, in the case of Dunham vs. Shindler. The 1859 opinion scores the attempted serving of summons in one county, for a suit filed in another, as "trifling with the administration of justice" and "for the sole purpose of harassing the defendant."
 The former chief executive and Black were represented by Reames and Reames of this city, and the Hartman syndicate by C. B. Watson of Ashland and W. H. Bennett of Portland.

 shouting replies over his counsel's objection.
 "Did you not at the time your wife was in a delicate condition at your Lexington, Ky., farm, accuse her of sleeping in Edgar T. Wallace's apartment in New York?" demanded the prosecutor.
 Repeated "I did not" from Mr. Stokes were heard above the shouting of defense and prosecuting attorneys as livid of face, the New York millionaire shook a finger at Smith.
 His last statement on direct examination had been that he never accused his wife of any personal wrongdoing during the period of their life together.
 In concluding more than nine hours of rapid fire description of his three years investigation of information that Mrs. Stokes once was an inmate of the notorious Everleigh club known in the night life of Chicago years ago, Mr. Stokes denied testimony by his mother-in-law, Mrs. Arthur Scott Miller of Denver, Colorado, that he had learned much of her family's history through viewing a family album with her at his side, that he ever had threatened to drag Mrs. Stokes' name into the mire unless she permitted a divorce or that he had told Mrs. Miller that he had had her daughter investigated before he married her.
 "I kept it quiet because I wanted to protect the children," said the aged defendant. He referred to the two born of his marriage in 1911 to the then Helen Ellwood of Denver.
 As Mr. Stokes stepped from the witness stand there was a scramble of photographers for the Everleigh club vase which he had testified he purchased from the room in which the club caretaker told him Marshall Field, Jr., son of the former Chicago merchant, was killed.
 "If that vase could but talk," Mr. Stokes testified the caretaker
