CRAWFORD SAYS FLAX INDUSTRY FUTURE BRIGHT

"The flax industry is destined to be one of the greatest industries in this state," was the statement made by Robert Crawford, who has had charge of the flax industry at the state penitentiary since August 5, 1916, and has visited centers of flax growing and handling throughout various parts of the United States, Canada and Europe. He spoke at the Chamber of Commerce luncheon this noon.

He indicated that one of the main disadvantages of the industry in the Willamette valley will be due to the fact that the Oregon product will be forced to compete with the products put out by plants that have been established for hundreds of years.

"It has been my greatest ambition to put this flax industry over," said Crawford, telling of the time and pains he had taken to put it on a permanent basis. He indicated that he has spent sums of his own money toward that end.

The speaker quoted a few statistics showing that the proper development of the flax industry will result in hundreds of thousands of dollars being brought into the Willamette valley. Present rates to the farmer are $38 per ton, delivered at the mill, he stated. With the use of a machine the flax can be pulled—it is never cut—for $7 an acre. By good farming a crop of at least two tons to the acre can be produced. If the flax is pulled by hand the cost mounts up to $20 an acre.

Crawford told a number of things about the plant of which he has charge. He has perfected a device of his own for artificially retting the flax. Fifty thousand pounds of the finished product were sold two weeks ago, the dealers being so well pleased that they would have bought several times that amount if they could have got it. A ton was sent to a Liverpool firm as a sample a few days ago. A smaller sample had been sent previously, but the English dealers apparently concluded that the sample had been specially picked, and wanted a fairer sample.

D. M. Sampson, president of Dominion Linens, Limited, one of the largest linen firms in Canada, was present at the luncheon, and spoke briefly. "I want to say that although I have been in Oregon a number of times before, this is the first time I have ever been in Salem," he said. "I believe you have a very beautiful little city here. As regards your flax, the flax from Oregon has already attained a great deal of attention." He spoke highly of the quality of Oregon produced flax.

INQUEST INTO DEATH OPENED THIS MORNING

her, not having the usual muffled detonation and she thought something was wrong. She went to the door and looked and saw nothing of her husband. Then she called, but received no response. She then went down to place where he was to blast and found the body. His pipe was about a foot from his hand. He was lying on his back west of the stump where he planned to blast. Evidently the explosion went off in his hand. She stated that ordinarily Swartz had a chance to get back about 45 feet from the blast in using fuses like the one which set off the fatal explosion.

Dr. W. Carlisle Smith also was a witness this morning, describing the nature of the wounds inflicted.

Interested auditors at the inquest today were Assistant Attorney General Liljeqvist, LaRonda M. Pierce and a man named Rob. Inson, special investigators out of the attorney general's office. These men all had been conducting an investigation for a week or more into charges lodged with the governor relative to the killing of H. H. Kuenzli, brother-in-law of Swartz, general manager of the state penitentiary.

Swartz stated today that the investigations so far carried on had led the investigation only into a field of rumor and surmise as far as he knew. It is likely this investigation will be halted by the death of Swartz.

Will It Be Filed Today.
The will of Swartz was admitted to probate today. It, by some strange freak, contains another one of those caprices of co-incidence which have not the whole community agree since the sudden taking off of Swartz, either accidentally, with suicidal intent, or with grim foul play lurking somewhere in the background.

The Swartz will is a carefully formed document, with a human interest angle around which the rest revolves.

The provision in the will which stands out and hits the eye is a charge upon the executrix of his estate that his body be cremated and the ashes be buried in Oak Hill cemetery, Wyandott county, Ohio, to rest with the bodies of his father and his brothers.

Kuenzli Is Stentorian
He then expressed the desire that his brother-in-law, H. H. Kuenzli accompany him to the state penitentiary to his last resting place and see that proper obsequies are performed. The expense of the trip to be borne from the estate of Swartz.

This will was executed on January 11, 1924. A little over a month after its execution, the body of H. H. Kuenzli was found in Kuenzli's barn with a bullet hole in the top of the head, and Swartz was accused of having some knowledge of how he came to his death.

These twin mysteries will remain unsolved unless some trick of fate unravels them. Unquestionably the majority of people in this section, with the officers, believe Wah Hong, Chinese resident of Ferry street, received an injured foot when an automobile driven by H. L. Wynans, 844 South Commercial street, ran over the foot Sunday. According to the report at the police station the automobile cut the corner and the attention of the Chinese was diverted by someone who shouted to him to look out for the approaching car. W. E. McDonald of Turner and J. A. McClain of Salem both sign a report at the police station to the effect that McDonald had the right of way and McClain did not see him when their cars collided today at Court and Commercial. Damage was nominal.

W. D. Clarke, 152 North 12th street, figured in two accidents Sunday, according to his reports at the station. The first was on State near 17th when he ran into another car that was standing without lights. The fenders of the standing car were slightly damaged. The second mishap was on State near Cottage when he started to pass a car driven by George Welty and at the same time Welty turned. Welty claims he gave the turn signal but on account of darkness Clarke did not see the signal. Clarke was driving a car owned by the state highway department.

Earl Straubinger of Portland today reported hitting a truck driven by an unidentified man at Church and Ferry. There was no damage.

H. R. Kieper collided with an unidentified car at State and High Saturday, claiming the other was off the right of way.

L. T. Say, clashed with an unidentified car on the Silverton road Saturday.

G. Woodry on Saturday reported that an unidentified car backed into his automobile.

Quick Starting SHELL GASOLINE

that both deaths were accidental and that the warp and woof of coincidence have woven a web of circumstance which presents a baffling exterior. A minority believe that Kuenzli came to his death from the hand of Swartz, as indicated by open charges made to the county court, the grand jury, the dead man's brother-in-law, the governor, and to the attorney general. If by chance these charges should be true, the law of compensation has worked with inexorable hand and the chapter of retribution has been written.

Estate Worth $10,000
The wishes of Swartz expressed in his will are to be carried out, although someone else than Kuenzli, the dead man's brother-in-law, will see that the ashes are placed as the voice from the dead directs.

The Swartz estate is valued at about $10,000 in the petition to admit the will to probate. Of this $2500 is estimated as personal property and $7500 as real property. Heirs are the widow, Edna L. Swartz, and two children, F. Marshall Swartz and Edwin J. Swartz, the latter being 13 years of age. The daughter is named as executrix in the will.

Even though since the will was written, Swartz charged his wife with infidelity and brought about the indictment of George Slaught, in connection with the alleged crime, he allowed his will to stand and his widow to participate in the benefits of the estate. He wills that half of his personal property go to his wife and the other half to his children in equal shares. His real property he divides into equal thirds between the widow and the two children.
