Definite preparation for graduation at Salem high school began this morning when J. C. Nelson, high school principal, began having all seniors sign their names on a list preparatory to having the diplomas printed. Contrary to the custom in most high schools, and the custom at Salem high school up until three years ago, the names and courses of graduating students will be printed on the diplomas, rather than written in ink. The present estimate is that there will be a graduating class of 236. The diplomas will be wrapped in paper colored with the colors of the graduating class.
