FOUR BOUND OVER TO GRAND JURY ON GIRL'S ACCUSATION

a loganberry patch where the boys got a gallon jug of wine that was cached there. All members of the party drank, said the witness, and she "got silly drunk." She also testified that one of the other girls was drunk. She said she was sober when she was taken home about 12:30 o'clock.

The second party took place a week ago Thursday night. In this party were four girls, all minors, and William Cook, Schackmann, Jess Wade and Clifford Willard. After leaving the skating rink the party got into Cook's car and drove to his place on 18th street where he got a jug of wine. They all drank but one girl, and emptied the jug.

Next they drove to Painter's woods where three of the boys took the empty jug and a siphon hose and went into the woods where they got the jug full of wine. Schackmann did not go with the other three, according to the witness' story, but remained in the car. The first girl witness in the case says she "got dead drunk" and the last she remembered was when they drove up to the Keizer school. She said she knew nothing more until the next morning.

The second girl witness asserted that she was not acquainted with Schackmann and that the man pointed out to her in the court room as Schackmann was not in the party, but that there was a man named Dick with them. It was obvious that the girl was mistaken in this testimony. Testimony showed, however, that while Schackmann drank with the party he left the others near the Keizer school and went to his home which is in that vicinity.
