Millerettes

—In looking over the stocks of merchandise at Miller's I was impressed with the thoroughness in which they were arranged. Dainty features of each department were the "Nationals" or merchandise with national or world wide reputation for quality, etc. Most people prefer to buy such qualities, for who would think of buying a car, a phonograph, a washing machine of a nameless variety? It is their assurance of guaranteed service, and that such merchandise carries a known quality that cannot be standardized or reduced for "price argument."

—I over heard a customer say that 98c as a selling price did not mean anything to her so long as the article in question was of known origin. What food for thought! Of course she was right. How can one determine quality of the nameless variety unless they are skilled in that particular field?

—The "Store of Good Store Keepers" will, in the future, as in the past, feature "Nationals" and from time to time I'll show you the labels to prove my point.
