NEED FOR SCOUT CRUISERS SEEN

Aboard U. S. S. Seattle at Sea, on a Sortie, May 27.—(A. P.)—The United States needs additional scout cruisers of not more than ten thousand deadweight tonnage each. The Washington agreement placed no limit regarding the number of this type of vessel, the need of which was shown in the recent two-day "war" between the White and Green detachments of the grand fleet, in the opinion of observers expressed in an informal discussion aboard the U. S. S. Seattle.

Of these speedy lightly armored surface eyes of the fleet America has 10. Congress authorized eight more but appropriated for the laying down of but two keels. The United States cruiser strength is overshadowed by both Japan and Great Britain.

Although America leads the world in the number of first class destroyers, it is pointed out that this superiority would be nullified in a naval engagement by the greater cruiser strength of other powers.
