D'ORSAY SCORES BIG SUCCESS IN CLEVER COMEDY

London came to Salem last night when George M. Cohan's international success, "So this is London" played at the Grand theater before an audience that packed the house. There were a thousand laughs in the three act comedy and not even a suggestion or an insinuation that was questionable.

Lawrence D'Orsay as Sir Percy Beauchamp, the conservative Englishman who pitied all other people because they were not English and who hated Americans with intensity, was perfect. His walk and his standing posture, to say nothing of his voice, his monocle and his drooping mustache, could not be improved upon.

The contrast between the characteristics of the "typical" American and the "typical" Englishman, the folly in considering that there is anything fundamental about these characteristics, were forcibly portrayed in this highly amusing comedy of the "high" classes in the two countries. The plot centered about the love affair of the English girl, Eleanor Beauchamp, the daughter of Sir Percy, and Hiram Draper, "Junior," the son—"they all have them, you know, old chap"—of the proverbial American millionaire.

All of the parts were splendidly taken. Arthur Pierson, as Junior, Miss Eunice Hunt, as Eleanor, and Hal Davis, Hiram Draper himself, and Helen Audiffred as Lady Amy Ducksworth, the mediator, were probably outstanding. More than a bit of the amusement of the crowd resulted from the "Are you there" telephone habit of the English and the "I say, old chap," and the "simply ripping" and the "Charmed, I'm surah," sayings which so raised the ire of Hiram senior.

"So This is London" has completed a year's run in London and a year in New York. In the intermission between the second and third act Mr. D'Orsay, after a number of curtain calls, told a few of his English jokes and then promised to come back next year in a play which is being written for him.

AFRICAN PRINCE FIGHTS IN CAFE

Chicago, May 27. — Another "international incident" appeared closed with the dismissal of disorderly charges against Kojo Tovalou Hoenou, prince of Dahomey, a French African colony, whose presence in a Loop cafe last night led to a fight in which he suffered the loss of a tooth.

Prince Kojo whose card describes as an editor, lawyer and president of the Universal League for Defense of the Black Race, addressed members of the women's international league for peace and freedom yesterday. In the evening he dropped into the grill of a downtown hotel, accompanied by three companions, two of them society women.

The management informed the prince that all tables had been reserved and an argument ensued.

Four policemen, after a tussle, took the prince to a night court where the charges were dismissed after the circumstances had been explained.
