SAYS OREGON HAS FIFTH OF TIMBER

One fifth of the timber land remaining in the United States at the present time is in the state of Oregon, according to L. F. Cronenmiller, deputy state forester, who spoke before the Marion-Polk county realtors' association at their weekly luncheon Thursday. Timber owners, and owners of industries directly connected with the timber industry, pay approximately one third of the taxes paid in the state, he declared.

There are at the present time, he stated, some 6,250,000,000 board feet of merchantable timber in the state.

Approximately 20 per cent of the area of timber in Oregon has been burned over since the original beginning of the timber industry, but the waste due to this will have been reduced by 50 per cent since the introduction of the present system of forest patrol.

Federal appropriation for the present year, to be expended for fire patrol in Oregon, amounts to $30,208, the sum of $50,000 has been appropriated for airplane patrol in the northwest.
