

WOMAN'S SLAYER BLAMES DEED ON LORD'S COMMAND

Los Angeles, Cal., June 19.—Thomas Gilchrist admitted early today to the police and a representative of the district attorney's office, that "under command of the Lord" he administered the wounds from which his 19-year-old stepdaughter, Mrs. Olive Morris, had died a few hours earlier at the receiving hospital.

The young woman had been brought to the hospital during the night with her throat cut, her skull fractured and her body slashed and battered after neighbors had found her in a semi-conscious condition in a vacant lot across the street from the Gilchrist home. A few words the officers were able to obtain from her before she died led to the arrest of Gilchrist when he appeared at his home an hour after the discovery of the crime.

In a bedroom of the house officers found overturned furniture, blood spattered clothing and other evidence of a desperate struggle. Just outside the door lay a hammer with a blood marked handle. Merville Morris, husband of the slain woman, said his wife had gone to the Gilchrist home to help her stepfather with his house work. In the absence of her mother who he visited in Texas, Gilchrist at first insisted he had not seen his stepdaughter, explaining he had been away from home all evening.

Hours of grilling failed to shake his story and he had been placed in a cell when he called the officers back with the statement that he wished to make a confession. "The Lord ordered me to do it," the officers quoted him. He then offered to accompany the police to his home to re-enact the crime.
